Don't blame Government for housing targets, says Deputy PM

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

DEPUTY Prime Minister Nick Clegg has waded into the row over development in Kent, disputing claims that high house-building targets are being forced on councils by central government.

In a letter to Lib Dem campaigners in Maidstone, Mr Clegg stressed that control was now in the hands of local authorities and that centrally-set targets had been abolished.

However, it is clear that not all, even in his own party, accept his claim, describing the Government's policy as "smoke and mirrors" and accusing the Coalition of underhand tactics forcing through building under the guise of localism.

Mr Clegg stepped into the dispute over housing after Maidstone's Lib Dem parliamentary candidate, and acquaintance of the Deputy Prime Minister, Jasper Gerard, asked for clarification of who was in charge of setting targets.

It followed concerns over the 14,800 new houses outlined for the county town in the borough council's Local Plan.

Mr Gerard and fellow Lib Dems fear that too much of the housing, proposed to be built up to 2031, will be built on greenfield sites put forward by developers. They say that the council is likely to nod through development on such sites while shifting blame to the Government by saying it is under the instruction of Whitehall.

But Mr Clegg has insisted centralised targets have been abolished and power is in local authorities' hands.

He also stressed that development should not come at the expense of the environment.

"Central control over planning has been relaxed and communities now

DEVELOPMENT

'If the Government doesn't get what it wants it will just reject council plans'

have a much greater say," wrote Mr Clegg. "While it is evident that housebuilding rates need to increase, protecting our countryside and green spaces is just as important, and there is an important balance to be struck.

"Growth and development must not come at the expense of protecting the environment.

"And with control being handed to communities, they will be able to make the most informed decisions to ensure housing developments are economically, socially and environmentally sustainable, and supported by properly planned infrastructure."

Mr Gerard said it "nailed the lie" by Tories at Maidstone, whom he claims say the council has little say in how many houses are built in the borough.

He said: "The council here is not following this sensible approach, preferring a developer-led call for sites which will result in unplanned development."

Maidstone Lib Dem councillor and planning spokesman Tony Harwood added: "The inevitable consequence is that in a few generations we will cease to be a green, rural borough and become little more than a congested and polluted extension of the Medway towns."

LETTER TO MAIDSTONE: Nick Clegg

However, Alex Perkins, a Lib Dem councillor on Tory-controlled Canterbury City Council, which unveiled its housing target of 15,000 new homes in May, called Mr Clegg's comments "rubbish".

"Central government says it's up to councils how many houses they build – but really if [the councils] don't plan enough, the Government will simply reject their Local Plans," he said.

"The whole thing is just smoke and mirrors. Localism is a lie. Nick Clegg is wrong at the end of the day.

"The Government is claiming to no longer have the power, but if it doesn't get what it wants it will just reject what the council has put forward. Localism doesn't exist – it's dishonesty.

"I don't usually praise the previous government, but at least it had the decency to impose targets. This government claims we have local decision-making, but we don't as there are conditions."

Cllr Perkins also accused the Government of using money from increased business rates to offer councils grants in the form of the New Homes Bonus as an incentive to build more houses.

"This is our money in the first place, but it will only come back to us if we build more houses," he said.

Maidstone Borough Council, which has been subject to fierce criticism over its housing target, said the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG) had instructed councils to provide housing to meet population growth up to 2031. This is set out in the Local Plan, the development strategy for each district.

"The working target is based on the latest demographic forecasts, updated by Kent County Council, taking account of DCLG household projections released in November 2010," said Maidstone's Tory cabinet member for planning, development and transport, Stephen Paine. "This working figure has been independently verified as a good starting point, but more work needs to be done before it can be converted into an actual target.

"Landowners, developers and others have put forward numerous greenfield sites to accommodate some of this expected development, but it is always the priority of Maidstone Borough Council to allocate brownfield sites first.

"No decisions have been made about any sites and our Local Plan will include policies to protect our countryside."

Sailor's ashes scattered in the sea that almost claimed him as a boy

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

THE ashes of a wartime sailor rescued by a Kent lifeboat crew 74 years ago have been scattered in the sea where he almost perished.

Despite moving to California in 1947, Peter Piercy never forgot the bravery of the Margate RNLI crew who hauled him as a boy aged just 16 from a sinking cargo ship.

It was 1939 and the teenager was on board the cargo vessel Matra when it struck a mine off the coast of Margate during a marathon transatlantic convoy crossing at the start of the Second World War.

After the explosion, the Matra immediately started to sink and an emergency call was put out to the Margate RNLI.

There were 85 people aboard and Mr Piercy was one of 52 rescued from the Thanet waters by the RNLI.

Several more were saved from the sea by another merchant vessel, but others perished.

Lifeboat crews are often asked to scatter the ashes of loved ones at sea, but when the crew at Margate, where the service has operated since 1860, was asked to carry out this particular task it was clear that a moving story lay behind it.

Mr Piercy moved to the US in 1947 after the war was over, but he never forgot the men who had saved his life that day in Thanet.

The former merchant sailor died two years ago and it was his son, Chris Piercy, who contacted the RNLI station from America, stating it was his father's wish that that his ashes be put into the ocean off Margate and asking if they could help fulfil his request.

These wishes were finally realised when Mr Piercy's family members, including some who travelled from California and Australia, gathered to witness the current lifeboat crew scatter his ashes off the coast.

Peter Barker, from the RNLI, said: "This was a very special and memorable occasion for us all.

"It was an honour to be asked to fulfil Mr Piercy's wishes and at the same time remember the bravery of the lifeboat crew of the day in a rescue described as being 'achieved with very great difficulty owing to the injured men'. It was clearly an experience that remained with Mr Piercy for the rest of his life."

To commemorate this special occasion the lifeboat crew presented the family with a framed reproduction of the original service report that was still held at the station.

Since the RNLI was founded in 1824 its lifeboat crews and lifeguards have saved more than 137,000 lives.

FINAL WISHES: Top, Chris Piercy and relatives of Peter at the lifeboat centre. Left are some of the survivors of the sinking; Peter is in the middle

Arrests in murder case

TWO people have been arrested on suspicion of murder in connection with the discovery of a man's body on the Isle of Sheppey.

A 44-year-old man and 43-year-old woman from London were in police custody at the time this newspaper went to press.

The body was found on Wednesday on the beach between Little Groves caravan site and Isle of Sheppey Holiday Village in Warden Bay Road, Leysdown. A post-mortem examination showed the victim had died of head injuries.

Cliff-climber rescued

A THRILL-SEEKER was embarrassed when his cliff-climbing exploits went wrong – leading to a rescue by the fire service.

The man became stuck in a cave halfway up the cliff-face Broadstairs. Watch manager Paul Ward said: "Having scaled the cliff, he reached his objective, then realised he was a little too nervous to climb down."

'Hit-and-run' probe

AN ELDERLY woman was found lying in a road with head and leg injuries after a possible hit-and-run in Birchington.

The 86-year-old was found at the junction of Shakespeare Road and Beach Avenue at midday on Tuesday. It is not known whether she was hit by a vehicle.

EXHIBITION

Bob Dylan a draw for gallery

HE is better known for writing songs than painting pictures, but Bob Dylan is continuing his foray into the art world – with a Kent shopping centre reaping the benefits.

Castle Galleries at Bluewater has unveiled six previously-unreleased limited-edition graphics from Dylan's The Drawn Blank Series.

There has been high demand and critical acclaim for the collection, which was originally released in June 2008, and now six previously-unseen graphics will be on sale at the Greenhithe shopping centre.

Each of the limited-edition graphics has just 295 copies worldwide, and each is hand-signed by the iconic musician.

The Drawn Blank Series is based on drawings made by Dylan while on the road from 1989 to 1992 and includes the titles Trailer, Bell Tower Stockholm, Corner Flat, Iron Railing and Backstage Dressing Room.

Castle Galleries Bluewater has displayed Dylan's collections periodically since 2009 and art bosses are hoping fans will look to buy one of the prints, priced between £1,750 and £5,500.

Gallery manager Peter Gilby said: "It is very exciting that we can display the works of the cultural phenomenon and artist that is Bob Dylan and share this with people.

"Art and music fans will love the release of The Drawn Blank Series 2013. Dylan uses colour in a unique way to give a new dimension to his sketches that are then transformed into new works of art, giving us some insight into one of the world's greatest icons."

Dylan himself is no stranger to the county, having played the Hop Farm Music Festival at Paddock Wood twice in the past five years.

ENERGY

Fracking: is it risking our

By Marijke Cox and Chris Murphy

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE dawn of the celebrated green era has barely risen and it seems that it's already about to be eclipsed.

Sustainable energy such as wind and solar is being forced to take a back seat as heated debates continue over the controversial shale-gas-extraction method of hydraulic fracturing – or fracking, as it is commonly known.

Supporters, who include many of Kent's MPs, say that an expansion of fracking will lead to cheaper gas bills while at the same time making Britain less dependent on unreliable oil imports from unstable countries.

But at a devastating cost, say opponents.

They argue that the contentious method, which involves blasting water and rock-dissolving fluids underground to break apart rocks and release shale gas, will lead to water contamination and flammable drinking water and could cause earthquakes.

It will also, they say, destroy precious land and see house prices drop.

Two sites are the focus of exploratory drilling in Kent: land by the A257 and A256, north of Woodnesborough, near Sandwich, and Cowden, near Tunbridge Wells.

Cowden has already seen test drilling take place in 2010 by energy company Cuadrilla – the firm behind the drilling in Lancashire that is believed to have been responsible for two minor earthquakes and that has now started drilling in Balcombe in West Sussex.

In east Kent, Coastal Oil and Gas Ltd was given the go-ahead by planning chiefs at Kent County Council to carry out exploratory work near Woodnesborough, although a temporary ban – later lifted on the understanding that safety procedures were in place – meant so far no such work has taken place.

Fears are that exploratory drilling, for which five companies have licences in this county, will pave the way for fracking to start if shale gas is discovered.

Recent comments made by Sevenoaks MP Michael Fallon suggesting such drilling could spread across the South East has seen Kent's anti-fracking campaigners poised, ready to jump into action, as protesters have in neighbouring Sussex, where exploratory drilling is taking place and where clashes between activists and police have already been seen.

Speaking to KoS this week, energy minister Mr Fallon said the Government believed shale gas had the potential to provide the UK with greater energy security, growth and jobs.

"We are encouraging safe and environmentally sound exploration to determine this potential. Fracturing for shale gas will only be done in a safe and environmentally sound way – and for the benefit of the local community as well as the country.

"Until we have drilled, fracked and tested a number of wells, we do not know how much can be extracted."

He stressed that no consent had been granted for hydraulic fracturing to extract shale gas anywhere in the UK.

The senior Tory also argued that of the 27,000 wells fracked in the US, there was no evidence of groundwater contamination.

He said: "I support fracking in any area, including Kent, provided it is subject to proper scrutiny in each case by the planning system and regulators to ensure that it will be safe and the environment will be properly protected."

But members of local activist group East Kent Against Fracking told KoS they were ready to get in the way of any firm attempting to start work.

"We are working to make sure those who will be making the decisions on this subject understand what is involved in fracking. Because I don't think they do," said spokeswoman Rosemary Rechter.

"Chancellor George Osborne's idea of having streamlined regulations shows a gross lack of understanding of how complicated and potentially dangerous the procedure is.

"We have got people in the group who want to go and festoon the fences and set up a camp. Most of us feel there is no need just yet, but we are ready to mobilise."

She added: "The fact house prices have gone down by 30 per cent in Lancashire, and people can't get buildings insurance that covers any effects of fracking, is making people very nervous."

The group is building up a network ready to lobby MPs and councillors, but how well they will do in this Conservative heartland, where Tory MPs are beginning to show support for fracking, remains to be seen.

Conservative Dover and Deal MP Charlie Elphicke said fracking could be a "huge opportunity" to reduce electricity bills and create jobs.

"It has great potential to cut energy bills, reduce fuel poverty and boost the economy," he said.

"However, it's very important it is safe and assurances are given that our water tables are not contaminated and there are no problems with ground stability."

Fellow Tory Mark Reckless, the member for Rochester and Strood, told us: "I support fracking and think we should push on with it as quickly as possible since it will boost the economy and bring down energy prices.

"Water-pollution risk in not high and any tremors that have taken place have been very small. Relatively few wells are necessary and once functioning will have limited impact on areas nearby."

Support was also given by the MP for Sittingbourne and Sheppey, Gordon Henderson (Con); Dartford MP Gareth Johnson (Con); and Thanet safety or drilling for the future?

North member Roger Gale (Con) – although all stressed the need for stringent safety measures.

Supporters of shale-gas extraction argue the UK needs to reduce dependency on unstable countries for oil.

It raises the question of whether the UK should be so reliant on other countries, held to ransom by increasing oil costs. And shouldn't we be looking at driving down energy bills?

However, should we really be sacrificing our land and safety to do so?

Some Labour members and, unsurprisingly perhaps, the Green Party, think not. Stuart Jeffery, from Maidstone Greens, warned that Mr Fallon's comments would mean Kent could expect many more planning applications for exploratory drilling.

"Fracking contaminates the groundwater by pumping millions of gallons of carcinogen-laden water in at high pressure, it causes earthquakes and it releases fossil fuels that increase climate change," he said.

"The increased interest in shale gas is down to this government's new tax breaks and it is clear that, once again, the Tories and Lib Dems have failed the country."

Fellow party member and Kent county councillor Martin Whybrow said more local protest groups would be set up in response to the interest in fracking.

"Here in Kent, the Department of Energy and Climate Change (DECC) has licensed five companies to search for and extract oil or gas, which could include the use of fracking as a gas-extraction method," he said.

"KCC, the county's Mineral Planning Authority (MPA), has granted planning permission for two licence-holders, Cuadrilla and Coastal Oil and Gas, to conduct exploratory drilling.

"I will be asking KCC officers for further details about these applications and will be finding out if there are any more applications for drilling in the system."

Last year, Green Party MP Caroline Lucas tabled a parliamentary early day motion calling for a moratorium on fracking until an environmental impact assessment was produced.

It followed two earthquakes in Blackpool that were subsequently linked to shale-gas test drilling.

However, the ban was lifted when experts made an independent assessment that the risk from tremors was low and could be minimised.

Another review, carried out by the Royal Society and the Royal Academy of Engineering, gave fracking the nod, provided that strong regulations were in place.

And in what was another blow to protesters, earlier this year the Government unveiled incentives for communities that allow fracking to take place – as much as £100,000 for each well.

Fracking companies could also receive tax breaks.

It appears that the Government is fully on board with a fracking revolution.

Speaking to KoS, ironically at the opening of the London Array wind farm last month, Prime Minister David Cameron said the controversial method had to be explored.

"We have to recognise that a fracking revolution has taken place in the US and we ought to be thinking about it here," he told us.

"Recent reports have shown we may have twice as much shale gas as previously thought and so this is an industry we should be encouraging."

Nevertheless, campaigners in Kent are determined to make it as hard as possible for the fracking revolution to take off.

Mrs Rechter said: "Once people get engaged and start to find out the facts, their attitude towards fracking hardens."

Jamie Weir, spokesman for the county's branch of the Campaign to Protect Rural England, Protect Kent, also warned of the impact on water resources. Questions have been raised as to whether we have enough water to cater for a fracking future.

"Kent is an extremely water-stressed county, so the last thing we need is any kind of problem that affects our water resources," said Mr Weir.

• To read South East MEP Keith Taylor's comment on fracking, turn to page 32.

WHAT IS FRACKING?

Fracking is the process of extracting natural shale gas by blasting water and rock-dissolving fluids into the ground to break apart rocks and release the gas.

It is banned in South Africa and France but has taken off in the US.

So far only exploratory work has taken place, but fears are that it could lead to fracking.

The Government says it should be encouraged and will lead to less reliance on unstable countries for oil and lead to cheaper energy bills.

However, opponents say it increases greenhouse-gas emissions, contaminates water supplies, can make drinking water flammable and can cause earthquakes.

Questions have also been raised about whether we have enough water to cater for a fracking revolution in this county. Water is crucial in the fracking process, but Kent is already deemed a "water-stressed" county and just last year drought warnings were in place.

WHAT THE COMPANIES SAY

Cuadrilla has a licence to carry out exploratory drilling in Kent. It is currently carrying out test drilling in Balcombe, West Sussex.

On its website, it states "robust safety measures are in place" to ensure the environment is protected.

"Cuadrilla's wells are all designed with at least three layers of steel casing – the surface casing, the intermediate casing and the production casing.

"The intermediate casing ensures there can be no leakage path from the shale reservoir up to the aquifer. These are inspected by an independent well-examiner before being sent to the Health and Safety Executive for review."

Cuadrilla says that in the US – where fracking has taken off – only a "handful" of operations have led to the subsurface environment being contaminated with national gas. The company said this was down to bad well design rather than fracking.

But what about risk of earth tremors?

Caudrilla says it follows recommendations in reports into the matter and will be adopting a number of early-detection systems.

The firm stressed that it would also be engaging with residents and stakeholders before fracking took place at any of its sites.

Festival's promise of a wild time

BACK TO NATURE: Now in its sixth year, the Festival of Wildlife offers people the chance to sample Kent's beautiful countryside and get closer to the wonderful and varied wildlife living in our county

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AS A county, Kent continues to come up trumps with its festival offerings.

Whether it's folk in Broadstairs, oysters in Whitstable or catching stars old and new at Lounge on the Farm in Canterbury, there's no denying the county's population is well served.

But there is another contender on the scene, offering something that's slightly different from the normal music or food delights.

And the stars of this show are not the kind you would find at your average festival.

Now in its sixth year, the Festival of Wildlife – the brainchild of Kent Wildlife Trust – shines a spotlight on the stunning wildlife and landscape we have in the Garden of England.

Initially meant to run just once, the event, held at Sevenoaks nature reserve, proved so popular that it has been returning year after year.

"It was originally devised as a one-off event to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the formation of Kent Wildlife Trust in 2008," said Ray Lewis, events officer at the trust.

"However, it proved such a success it's been held annually ever since. The aim is to raise awareness and appreciation of the natural world, and in particular the incredible diversity and beauty of Kent's wildlife and landscape."

proves big attraction

He says this year's free programme is packed with events designed to appeal to the entire family – as well as more knowledgeable naturalists.

This time it has got the support of leading BBC cameraman Richard Taylor-Jones.

The nature expert, who lives in Deal, has made wildlife films for Springwatch, Countryfile and The One Show.

He will be talking to visitors about the techniques and challenges of filming and festival-goers can watch wildlife footage, some of which was shot in this county.

The event will also include bug-hunting, guided walks and angling demonstrations. The Best of Kent stalls will be selling arts and crafts plus locally-sourced food.

Mr Lewis said: "Sevenoaks reserve is the perfect venue due to its variety of habitats: lakes, streams, woodland and wild gardens, but also because of its ease of access for wheelchairs and pushchairs."

Adding to the festive atmosphere will be live music, folk-dancing, a birdwatchers' cabaret, gardening tips and virtual whale-watching.

Mr Lewis said there would be opportunities to participate in creative, environmentally-aware workshops and demonstrations to help people learn more about the natural environment and wildlife of Kent.

A spokesman for the trust said: "We were formed in 1958 and are supported by more than 31,000 members and 1,000 registered volunteers.

"Our aim is to protect and improve habitats in the countryside, coast and town for the benefit of the wildlife and people of Kent."

The free festival is at Sevenoaks Wildlife Reserve on the weekend of August 17-18 between 10am and 4pm. Visit www.kentwildlifetrust.org.uk or phone 01622 662012 for details.

DEATH

Tragedy on railway

TRAIN services in east Kent came to a standstill after a man was hit by a train.

The incident happened at 1.35pm on Tuesday close to Chilham station.

A British Transport Police spokesman said the death was not being treated as suspicious.

It was the second tragedy on Kent's railway that day, after the body of a man was found on tracks near Maidstone East.

BTP said the victim had been electrocuted by the live rail. The death is not suspicious.

ILLEGAL TRADING

Knives sold to children

A TRADING Standards sting in Medway has revealed four out of 10 shops to be selling knives to children.

Under-age volunteers, accompanied by Trading Standards Officers, visited 10 premises in an attempt to buy knives. Four shops are now under investigation and face formal action.

No hub but Manston and Lydd could play a part, says commission chief

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

LYDD and Manston could play a role in expanding airport capacity in the South East but are "highly unlikely" to be developed into major hubs.

The message has come from Sir Howard Davies, who is leading the commission looking into how the country will cope with an estimated rise in passenger numbers from the present 180 million to 294m by 2050.

He told the BBC: "I think that, bluntly, it's highly unlikely that either of those [Lydd or Manston] would be a candidate for the major hub airport of the sort we've been discussing."

He did, though, say that "quite a lot of imagination" had been put into the question of how existing traffic, "perhaps particularly the business aviation – that's the private-planes traffic", could be distributed.

Last week, Manston bosses revealed their submission to the commission, which included the suggestion of becoming a 'reliever airport'.

They believe the Thanet operation could cope with up to 10m passengers a year by 2033 and up to 16m passengers and one million tonnes of freight by 2050.

This would be achieved by taking low-cost passenger and freight traffic from the region's airports and providing a maintenance, repair and overhaul service for the South East.

PLANS: Charles Buchanan says Manston airport could handle up to 16 million passengers by 2050

Sir Howard said: "One does need to look at the role these smaller airports can play in the total picture, but, frankly, I don't think we are going to see four runways at Lydd."

He said the commission was "taking a balanced approach to looking at things that were buildable" and that, while a hub airport was likely to be needed, its location depended on "where [aviation] growth in the future was likely to come".

Sir Howard has a list of proposals on the table, including six for the Thames estuary.

A short-list of the more favoured ideas will be published before the end of the year, but a final decision will not be made until 2015 – after the next general election.

Charles Buchanan, chief executive of Manston airport, told KoS: "We have always acknowledged Manston would never be the new hub airport for London and the South East.

"However, we strongly believe it could be a successful regional passenger and freight airport, which could provide critical additional capacity and relief now to the region's already-congested airport network.

"I was pleased to hear Sir Howard acknowledge that smaller airports, such as Manston, have a role to play and the proposals submitted to his commission have been 'imaginative and thoughtful' in how to increase airport capacity in the South East."

Police warning after cannabis plants found

A 43-year-old man has been jailed for almost three years after detectives uncovered two cannabis factories with a total of more than 100 plants in Gravesend.

Ian Edward McLaren, of Cambridge Street, Pimlico, admitted cultivating cannabis, abstracting electricity and possessing a weapon for the discharge of noxious liquid or gas.

Investigating officer DC Roger Harris said: "McLaren's sentence should send a clear message to others who carry out these activities: we will find you, charge you, take you to court and you may well end up in jail."

POLICE

More than 100 arrests in violent-crime blitz

THE county's police force is continuing its summer blitz on violent crime, making a further 138 arrests in the latest operation.

Using the force's predictive-policing data, officers patrolled the county's town centres, where historically violent crime has been an issue.

Ass Ch Con Rob Price said: "Summer months traditionally show an increase in violence on the streets and our officers are being placed around the county to arrest anyone who carries out this type of offence. It only takes a second to stop and think. Walk away from confrontation."

COMMENT

It's simple: harassment and threats are crimes

Police and Crime Commissioner Ann Barnes calls for action against the cowardly cyber-bullies

IS IT me, or are so many people missing a fundamental truth with the internet and all that goes with it – the websites and social-networking phenomena of the likes of Twitter and Facebook?

I'm referring to the recent controversy about the cruel online bullying and threatening behaviour directed at a number of people.

The fundamental truth is that it's a crime to harass or threaten someone. Plain and simple. The way that the harassment and threats are delivered is not relevant. If someone threatens by letter, phone or even by shouting in the street, they're committing a crime.

It's the same on Twitter. The advent of the internet has not altered our responsibilities as people. Yes, it's given us all so many more opportunities to interact and communicate, but we are still people with all the responsibility that goes with that.

I was horrified to read of the death of 14-year-old Hannah Smith, who was a victim of online bullying. I'm staggered that this poor girl felt she had to end her life as a result of horrible, grotesque online abuse. It is bullying at the lowest degree, hiding behind a computer screen or tablet to post cruel and hurtful messages.

The internet is a fantastic tool that allows you to access all the information you could dream about at the touch of a button.

However, it is also a danger to the young and vulnerable. We need the resources and the will to enforce existing laws.

Hannah Smith was a typical carefree schoolgirl whose life tragically ended due to constant horrible comments and abuse by strangers.

The website Ask FM, where the comments were posted, has been in the headlines over the last few days as it has been linked with other suicide attempts by young people. I cannot believe that we are unable to enforce the relevant laws across such sites and stop this from happening.

There are calls for the Prime Minister to now step in and close the site, with which I agree. We need to protect our young people.

But as well as 'enforcement', one of the best ways is to make it socially unacceptable to be seen to be engaging in this offensive behaviour. Every family and school should teach young people that bullying online is just as unacceptable as bullying face to face.

Only the other week I was disgusted by 'trolling' on Twitter, particularly targeting women.

If you're on Twitter, then part of your life is quite literally lived online, but this is no green light for abuse.

Every human being should be treated with respect. Women are no different.

Labour MP Stella Creasy and campaigner Caroline Criado-Perez were both subject to vile comments and rape threats by strangers. And all because of a campaign to put Jane Austen's image on the new £10 note.

I really hope Twitter proceeds with the in-tweet abuse button and puts an end to such inhuman behaviour.

Best wishes,
Ann

your Kent Police and Crime Commissioner

STARRING ROLE: Jude Law, left, and Richard E Grant in Dom Hemingway, the latest film to be shot in Kent

Dedicated team credited with getting county film exposure

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

AS CHANNEL Four drama Southcliffe, filmed in Faversham, continues to divide opinion, Kent's scenery is due to play a starring role in two new films.

Due for release in 2014, Dom Hemingway is about an infamous safecracker. It stars Emilia Clarke (Game of Thrones) and heartthrob Jude Law and will feature the Kent countyside.

Further, Ron Howard, director of Apollo 13 and The Da Vinci Code, chose the county as a location for his new film Rush, a biopic on former Austrian Formula One champion Niki Lauda.

Kent Film Office told KoS that the last financial year had been its best ever, with film and TV productions boosting the county's economy by an estimated £7.3 million – and at the same time putting the county in front of a worldwide audience.

However, it's not just the big screen.

Filming has been completed for Sky Atlantic's new drama The Tunnel and new TV comedy series Big Bad World starring Blake Harrison from The Inbetweeners.

Gabrielle Lindemann, from Kent Film Office, also revealed that the County Hall-based team was helping facilitate a new sitcom set in the county.

"A couple of other features are also in the process of being locked down," she added.

"We can't say too much about them at the moment because providing production companies with a discreet and practical working environment is crucial in securing their continued business."

Mrs Lindemann believes that having a team dedicated to bringing in new productions gives Kent a distinct advantage over other counties.

"At the Kent County Council Film Office, we understand that location filming will always be script-led," she said.

"But having a film office provides Kent with a unique tool to promote its locations and offer production companies a bespoke service which makes filming in the county more attractive for them by reducing risk.

"We can also liaise on companies' behalf with other local authorities – Kent Highway Services, Kent Police and other such organisations – resolving issues such as finding parking spaces for the not-inconsiderable amount of equipment that they often bring."

Mrs Lindemann believes it's thanks to blockbusters like Sherlock Holmes and Les Misérables using the county that word of mouth has spread.

"Production companies prefer to take their business to a tried and trusted partner, so we get quite a bit of repeat business. We try to ease their way so they can concentrate on being creative and don't get bogged down by bureaucracy."

Kent has proved its worth as a popular destination in the past couple of years with Brad Pitt's World War Z, Trance, Henry V, The Poison Tree, Call The Midwife and Mr Selfridge all being shot here.

Harry Hill The Movie and The Muppets – Again! are recent others adding to the list.

KCC's community services member, Mike Hill, said: "Kent has a fantastic range of locations to offer – historic, picturesque countryside, wonderful beaches, market towns and bustling high streets.

"Our film office does an excellent job in assisting TV and film companies who are always looking for interesting and suitable locations."

PETS

Cat crisis as hundreds of unwanted pets stretch welfare charity to limit

HELP! Cats of all ages are in need of new homes

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT is in danger of becoming overrun by unwanted cats as households continue to struggle to meet pet bills.

With the economy still struggling to get on its feet, many families are finding it hard to cope with another mouth to feed and high veterinary costs to settle. A rapidly-moving rental market is also leading to cats simply being left behind, essentially dumped, as owners move on to another property.

The RSPCA in Kent is full to capacity with more than 350 unwanted felines clogging the system.

The charity is urging owners to ensure their cat is spayed or neutered in a bid to cut the ever-growing population.

An increase in feral cats is also a concern as the once-domestic animals turn wild in a bid to survive, scavenging food where they can.

The RSPCA says that it has reached crisis point.

It needs to find temporary foster homes to help relieve the overcrowding in its catteries at Ashford, Bromley, Canterbury, Thanet, Leybourne, Medway, Maidstone, Tunbridge Wells, Headcorn and Sittingbourne.

Only recently, two boxes of kittens were ditched separately at the Ashford cattery door.

At Woodchurch, a car slowed as it passed the cattery and three animals were thrown out.

An RSPCA spokesman said these branches had run out of space to care for abandoned or sick cats.

Staff say they cannot remember a worst crisis for the cat population.

RSPCA branch support specialist Becky Blackmore said: "Broadly, the problem is that irresponsible and accidental breeding of cats is leading to our rehoming centres being full of kittens, growing into young cats, without sufficient homes being available.

"At the beginning of July in Kent, the RSPCA had 311 cats and kittens in their care, with a further 60 at our Leybourne animal centre.

"Some of the branches run their own rehoming centres, but others have to keep cats in private boarding facilities or fostering facilities and rehome them from there.

"Money has to be raised locally to make all this possible.

"Our RSPCA branches are run by volunteers and they are often on the receiving end of frustration when the public ask us to take on their unwanted cats.

"We never put a cat to sleep if it can be rehomed. However, resources are now so stretched that we need the public to support us to ensure we can continue to provide this service for unwanted, abandoned sick and injured cats in Kent.

"For example, hundreds of cats involved in road accidents each year remain unclaimed at vets. Often the RSPCA has to spend hundreds of pounds on vet bills to get them fit to be rehomed, but costs have escalated to such a degree that branches cannot meet the growing demand without more support.

"We are calling on the public to ensure their cats are neutered.

"It is a myth that it is best for a female cat to be allowed to have one litter of kittens."

The RSPCA said the Canterbury branch recently took on a litter of kittens to hand-rear when they were only a day old.

This meant staff giving two hourly feeds 24 hours a day. The owner hadn't got their cat neutered in time and so she ended up pregnant while still under six months herself and needed a Caesarean, costing hundreds of pounds.

REGENERATION

The shocking state of a once-thriving resort

Report likens Margate's social problems to those in inner-city areas, writes Chris Murphy

GRIM findings of extreme social problems in the former tourist hot-spot of Margate have sparked hope that the Government will take notice of its issues.

Poverty, high unemployment, mental-health issues and children dumped in the care system are just a few of a long list of concerns highlighted in a new report, Turning the Tide, by think-tank the Centre for Social Justice (CSJ), looking at social problems in coastal resorts.

In fact, so badly did Margate fare that it was compared to some of the UK's most deprived inner-city areas.

However, from the grey outlook comes a possible ray of light.

A call has been made for efforts to be "ramped up" to help the seaside town, which was one of five examined by the CSJ. The others were Rhyl, Clacton-on-Sea, Great Yarmouth and Blackpool. Together, the five towns' total working-age benefits bill is almost £2 billion.

The report stated that the road to Margate's regeneration was long and there was "no quick fix", but it stressed there were "dedicated people in education, local government and the community who are working hard to help revive the town".

NO QUICK FIX: There is a long way to go before Margate can hit former glories

"There must be a continued and concerted effort to regenerate housing, drive up skills and improve neighbourhoods," the report stated.

"But with high levels of family breakdown, it is also important more is done to help keep families together.

"Doing these things will help bring in additional investment and jobs and will put Margate on a more stable footing for the next generation."

Margate has been caught in a poverty loop that can be traced back to the 1970s and the start of foreign package holidays, taking tourism away from the British seaside and hitting what was a large source of income.

Local spending dropped, the economy faltered and house prices also started to reduce dramatically.

London boroughs started to buy up cheap housing and place problem families and children in care, something that authorities in Kent have struggled to stop.

Combine that with released prisoners and large numbers of recently-arrived immigrants, both legal and illegal, gravitating towards the town, and it's a clear recipe for difficulties.

Thanet District Council leader Clive Hart said that in his Cliftonville West ward "there isn't a day that goes by when you don't see a family pushing their possessions around in a shopping trolley, moving to a new home".

Jenny Whittle is cabinet member for specialist children's services at Kent County Council. She said she was pleased the Government finally seemed to be waking up to the problem, which could prompt a healthy rejuvenation of the town.

Cllr Whittle said a major problem was Looked After Children (LAC) being dumped there. However, there is fresh hope the practice may be reduced, if not ended completely.

The CSJ – launched by work and pensions secretary Iain Duncan Smith – says Margate is suffering "severe social breakdown" and the practice of moving vulnerable children to the town is "perpetuating the cycle".

CSJ director Christian Guy said: "Some of these areas have been left behind. We must ramp up efforts to revive Britain's coastal towns, not just for visitors but for residents, too."

Cllr Whittle said: "I am always hearing from head-teachers saying they have to suddenly find a place for yet another child. It's not right they are moved so far from a place they know, unless they are in danger.

"Finally, it seems the Government is realising the problem and London boroughs are being told to re-open children's homes so they can be taken care of there. Councils do need to take responsibility for their own."

The report says coastal towns have become "dumping grounds for groups such as care leavers, people with substance-abuse problems, those with mental-health issues and ex-offenders".

CSJ policy director Alex Burghart said such people had "complex needs" that intensified "pressure on schools, social workers and other services".

Thanet North MP Roger Gale told KoS that he was encouraged by the direction the town was now heading, with the Turner Contemporary and a new boutique hotel. He stressed, however, that he would be more optimistic with Manston airport fully working, Arlington House "spruced up" and the heritage park under way.

"I think Margate's prospects are reasonably good, but I am not pretending we can be complacent. I think it's on the up and it's a place people want to come to again."

EMPLOYMENT

Dame Kelly and friends put trust in youth

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

IT'S been almost a decade since Dame Kelly Holmes crossed the finish line in Greece to clinch her second gold medal of the 2004 Athens Games.

The 1,500-metre and 800m champion became a national hero overnight, to be honoured as a Dame of the British Empire and hailed as an inspiration to future generations.

She has since gone on to be president of Commonwealth Games England, as well as Kent Olympic Ambassador.

However, it's her charity work that is being celebrated this month as the Dame Kelly Holmes Legacy Trust reaches its fifth anniversary.

Set up in 2008, the charity helps disadvantaged youngsters start their careers, using retired world-class athletes to help inspire them, getting them ready for the working world.

So far, more than 100,000 young people have been helped by the trust.

Four-time British taekwondo champion Romaine Bailey is working with Thanet teenagers to help them focus on their future.

The 24-year-old told KoS: "As athletes we can use our experience to help people because there are highs and lows in our lives as well.

"We try to express to young people that no matter what you have come through, not to let it knock you back. You have to keep focused."

Mr Bailey and the trust recruit young people from Jobcentres in Margate and Ramsgate as well as youth clubs.

"We get an outside partner to come in and get them comfortable with each other because this is their family for the next two months.

"Then we teach them life skills and interview techniques and find out what they want to do in life and what they want to get out of the project."

The team also works with Jobcentre staff to secure job interviews for the teenagers as well as take them to both a secondary and a disability school to get them coaching sport.

Mr Bailey said: "We just try to build them as individuals. We try to identify that they do have something to offer."

So far, 71 per cent of the young people who were referred via the Jobcentre were in education, employment, volunteering or training by the end of the programme.

Dame Kelly said it was making a positive impact: "Olympians, Paralympians and retired athletes have experienced the highs and lows of world-class competition and know what it's like to overcome adversity and have the will to succeed.

"Passing this on to younger generations is the greatest legacy sport can achieve."

MARINE

Jellyfish invasion seen as good barometer for our weather... and seas

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH the heatwave still here and some of the country's best beaches on our doorstep, it is hardly surprising that the Kent coast has been teeming with holidaymakers in recent weeks.

However, it seems that we are not the only ones enjoying the refreshing charms of the sea.

Statistics from the Marine Conservation Society show that jellyfish are arriving at our shores in high numbers due to the hot spell.

Thankfully, most of the species sighted off Kent have been largely harmless, except for one that can give an irritating and sometimes painful sting.

So far, in the late spring and summer of 2013, there have been sightings of blue, compass and moon jellyfish. It is the compass form that can deliver an annoying sting.

Happily, however, dangerous forms such as the Portuguese man-of-war and mauve stingers have not been seen floating off our coast.

According to marine experts, the jellyfish are being drawn in largely because of the hot weather, although there are other factors.

"There is some evidence jellyfish numbers are increasing in places around the world, including UK seas, although some scientists argue jellyfish numbers increase and then decrease normally every 20 years or so," said Dr Peter Richardson, MCS biodiversity programme manager and jellyfish expert.

"However, others believe these increases are linked to factors such as pollution, over-fishing and possibly climate change.

"I think we should consider jellyfish populations as important indicators of the state of our seas, and the MCS jellyfish survey helps provide some of the information we need to understand more about them."

The MCS is asking the public to report unusual sightings and has recorded a big rise in the number of types of jellyfish around the country's south coast.

A spokesman said: "Kent sees a significant number of jellyfish every year."

Growing numbers of jellyfish means that the chances of bathers having an encounter with the floating creatures is increasingly likely.

And medical experts are warning people not to rely on the age-old urine treatment to help should they be stung.

"A sting from a jellyfish can be extremely painful, but trying to treat it with urine isn't going to make your day any better," said Joe Mulligan, British Red Cross's head of first aid.

"Urine just doesn't have the right chemical make-up to solve the problem."

He said it was better and easier to simply use seawater, adding: "If people have been stung, they need to get out of the water to avoid getting stung again. Once out, slowly pouring seawater over the sting will help ease the pain.

"Doing the same thing with vinegar can be even more effective as the acid helps neutralise the jellyfish sting. But, unless you're near a chip shop, seawater will probably be easier to find."

DESIGN

Brothers salvage the tools that let your imagination take flight

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

TALENTED: Brett and Shane Armstrong design and sell unique furniture crafted from aviation-related items

THE childhood dream of possessing your own ejector seat can now be a reality after two brothers from Kent opened a rather special business.

Hangar 54 was created by Brett and Shane Armstrong, who specialise in taking unusual aviation-related objects and turning them into pieces of artwork and furniture.

Some of the items in their collection include the fuselage from a Boeing 737 that has been polished and transformed into a time-zone wallclock; a Second World War bomb transformed into a coffee table; and a 1968 Corsair belly tank, imported from Washington and converted into a red leather sofa.

The company, which is based in Marden, combines Shane's background in design and engineering high-end joinery with his brother's sales and recruitment history, is already attracting global interest.

It all started in June 2011, when Shane saw a desk made from a piece of salvaged plane engine, inspiring him to create Hangar 54.

"I fell in love with the concept and the potential these often-disregarded pieces have," said Shane. "It's been two years in the making, but I now feel we've created a British-made collection to be proud of."

With Martin-Baker ejector seats as bar stools and plane cowlings as reception desks or drinks bars, it's no surprise that Hangar 54 has pulled in some high-profile shoppers.

"They are all pretty strange – taking a spare fuel tank and converting it into a sofa is pretty out there, I would say," said Brett. "But they are beautiful works of art, and making a salvaged 747 engine cowling into a reception desk is a unique way to earn a living.

"We've had to sign an agreement not to name anyone, but we've recently had a piece bought by a major film company. It was used in the dressing room of a famous actor.

"That was really exciting and great exposure."

Brett manages sales and is responsible for finding the raw materials used within the collection, while Shane takes care of the design and manufacturing side of the business.

Brett said: "There isn't one set place where we find our materials. That's the beauty and enjoyment of 'the chase'. The internet and salvage or breakers' yards are fruitful. But it comes from anywhere and everywhere.

"We were contacted by a gentleman only last month who has been collecting ejector seats for 15 years. In these tough economic times he needed to recoup some money. These are the calls I particularly enjoy – we're in negotiation to buy them all. I already have customers in mind."

Some of the larger pieces are sold for upwards of £20,000, with the rarer and more iconic materials used in the process adding to their value.

Brett, who began in business selling football memorabilia aged 19, said: "The price reflects the rarity and uniqueness of the items we sell.

"Every item from the collection is sold with its own unique 'log book' which contains an individual serial number and signed letter of authenticity. The book also documents the timeline and process used to complete the piece."

The specialist pieces are refined down to the very last detail, something the brothers pride themselves on: "Our collection is often bought by large corporations who want to create a lasting impression and a wow factor. But we also sell to interior designers and individuals, people who are looking for distinctive designs or something unique that creates a point of conversation."

HEALTH CARE

Most vulnerable put at risk by decision to move mental-health service, says council

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

COUNCIL chiefs in Medway have raised concerns over the decision to shut acute mental-health services and relocate them elsewhere in Kent, warning it will put vulnerable people at risk.

Kent and Medway NHS joint overview and scrutiny committee last week agreed to close the ageing A-block at Medway Maritime Hospital in Gillingham, with in-patient provision instead being increased at Canterbury, Dartford and Maidstone, and investment in community services.

While bosses at Kent and Medway NHS and Social Care Partnership Trust (KMPT) welcomed the approval, stating that "rigorous checks" had been carried out to ensure the remaining three units could cope with increased demand, Medway Council has expressed concern.

This is despite A-block being described as "very poor in design and location". A public consultation into services was carried out last year.

Councillor Wendy Purdy, lead on the NHS committee at Medway, warned that closure of acute mental-health services could place vulnerable people at risk.

"Medway needs local in-patient services, and across Kent and Medway all the indications are we need more, not less, beds.

TOUGH CALL: Kent and Medway NHS has agreed to close the A-block at Medway Maritime Hospital

"This is a matter of serious concern," she said. "While we welcome investment in community mental-health services, the reality is that at the moment many people are having to be admitted to mental-health beds far away from Medway, at great human cost to them and their families, and at significant financial cost to the NHS locally. It would be more sensible for NHS managers to commission sufficient bed capacity in Medway to meet our local needs."

The matter is due to be considered by Medway's health and adult social care overview and scrutiny committee on Tuesday, August 20.

It might then be referred to the secretary of state if members do not think there is sufficient capacity locally.

Cllr Purdy said: "I am calling on NHS managers in Medway to get round the table to see how we can ensure vulnerable people with mental-health needs in Medway are provided with the critical services they need and deserve.

"It is not acceptable that the people of Medway, with our growing population and local need, are left without in-patient services."

NHS bosses say the new provision – expected to be rolled out over the next 12 months – would see an increased number of acute beds and three centres of excellence developed in Dartford, Canterbury and Maidstone.

A focus is being placed on community services and investment in developing crisis resolution and home treatment to avoid unnecessary admission to hospital.

Dr Karen White, KMPT medical director, said: "It's an opportunity for us to strengthen community services for people in mental-health crisis, supporting more care at home, which is what most people want, and to deliver care in modern accommodation which has been designed to meet the needs of service-users and staff."

PUBLIC AWARENESS

RNLI launches campaign to warn swimmers about the hidden dangers of the sea

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH thousands decending on Kent's beaches to enjoy the fine weather, the RNLI is launching a campaign to warn people of the dangers of the sea.

The lifeboat charity fears a big rise in rescues due to the prolonged hot temperatures.

In 2011, the latest figures available, the service carried out 378 rescues in the county... during a summer with poor weather.

Of those saved, 96 were in Sheppey, primarily from powered vessels such as speedboats and jet-skis.

There were 33 rescues across all Kent's waters from manual pleasure craft and 118 from sailing boats.

Littlestone-on-Sea appeared to be the safest area, with just 11 call-outs.

The RNLI is now launching its Respect the Water campaign in a bid to highlight the dangers of swimming in the sea.

While not wanting to dissuade beachgoers from enjoying a bathe, the charity aims to teach people how to avoid getting into trouble.

An RNLI spokesman said: "At this time of year it seems almost every day is a danger day unless simple precautions are taken.

"During heatwaves, particularly during school-holiday time, incidents do go up."

Respect the Water looks to reduce the number of incidents and fatalities around the coastline.

An average of 150 people die around the UK's coasts each year, which is more than those killed in cycling accidents.

But this year has already seen more than 200 deaths in UK waters, many of them during last month's heatwave.

It seems men aged between 25-65 are the most careless, with male deaths outnumbering female six to one.

Key causes of coastal drownings are rip currents, cold-water shock, slips, trips and falls, alcohol and fatigue.

Cold-water shock can occur at anything below 15ºC – the average sea temperature in this country is a mere 12ºC.

The RNLI says that while it realises people want to have fun when they visit the coast, even the most experienced seaside visitors can get into trouble.

Ross Macleod, RNLI coastal-safety manager, said: "The seaside is so popular – especially in the good weather we've been enjoying recently – but it's crucial to stay safe and remember key safety advice so you can enjoy it properly.

"That's why we have launched the Respect the Water campaign – to raise awareness of drowning and water safety, ultimately reducing the number of people who lose their lives at the coast."

The Respect the Water Punchbag Challenge, in which people can see how quickly they tire against 250kg of water, will be in Margate from Sunday to Saturday, August 25-31.

TOP TIPS TO STAY SAFE AT THE SEASIDE

- Choose a lifeguarded beach and swim between the red and yellow flags. Thanet and Swale have RNLI lifeguards on their beaches.
- Despite warm air temperatures, the water is still cold, so acclimatise gradually in shallow water.
- Cold water can drain body heat very quickly, so wear suitable thermal protection; a wetsuit also provides additional buoyancy.
- Never swim in the sea alone.
- Don't over-estimate your ability – the sea is very different to a pool. Even the strongest and most competent swimmers can tire quickly in the sea.
- Don't swim too far out of your depth.
- If you get caught in a rip current, don't panic. Don't try to swim against it or you'll get exhausted. If you can stand, wade – don't swim. If you can, swim parallel to the shore until free of the rip and then head for shore; raise your hand and shout for help.
- When at the coast, stay away from the edge of cliffs, stick to marked pathways and read safety signage.
- Alcohol and water don't mix – don't drink and drown. If you want a drink, do it after swimming, not before.

Don't be afraid of hearing-aids, says television's Doctor Hilary as he joins awareness campaign

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

FROM spotting the tell-tale signs of anorexia to analysing a footballer claiming to have sex addiction, Dr Hilary Jones has seen it all from the many sofas of morning TV he has graced over the past two decades.

Having spent time working as the in-house consultant for TVAM, GMTV and, more recently, Daybreak, Dr Jones has become one of the most recognisable faces on daytime television.

And now the Kent-based practitioner is focusing on his home county and backing a country-wide campaign to raise awareness of hearing damage.

The celebrity specialist believes there could be as many as 97,000 people in Kent with undiagnosed hearing loss and is hoping to tackle the taboo subject of hearing-aids.

"Just from the work I do in seeing patients, I know I often have to repeat myself because the patient cannot hear me properly," he said.

"Acknowledging deterioration of hearing and its impact on quality of life is the first step. The ultimate consequence of an undiagnosed and untreated hearing problem is social isolation."

Dr Jones said many people may not know they had hearing damage or might be too embarrassed to get help, afraid of having to wear a hearing-aid.

SAFE HANDS: Kent-based Dr Hilary Jones, right, is involved in September's Hearing Awareness Month

The doctor, who still has practices in London and Hampshire, said: "Having a hearing-aid is not the same as it used to be.

"They are not the beige banana things you have behind your ear any more. The technology we have now means you can barely even see it.

"You can tell people who are hard of hearing much easier than someone who has a hearing-aid these days."

A 'hidden hearing' session is being held in seven Kent town centres, including Tunbridge Wells, Canterbury, Margate, Maidstone and Bromley during September as part of Hearing Awareness Month – and Dr Jones will be making a few surprise visits to talk to patients and offer free tests.

Having qualified in 1976 at the Royal Free Hospital, London, after six years of study, Dr Jones has had a varied career, including a stint as the medical officer on Tristan da Cunha, the most isolated inhabited island in the world.

In 1981 he worked as a troubleshooting GP and emergency doctor for the oil industry at Sullom Voe in Shetland for offshore medical support before the media came calling. He began presenting educational medical programmes for British Medical TV in 1986; Sky TV later adopted these for its news bulletins.

But it was in 1989 that he got his big break, joining the successful breakfast station TVAM.

"One day I just wrote a letter and told them I had a few ideas for their show. They invited me in and offered me a two-week trial," he said.

"It worked well and they gave me a contract at the end of it. It was as simple as that – I'm a firm believer in if you don't ask you don't get."

He has also had a column in the News Of The World and starred in reality show Dancing On Ice. However, he says that being in the public eye is not his primary motivation.

"I have never really classed myself as a celebrity – I just take part in broadcasting. I have balanced broadcasting and my practices for many years and it's a balance that works really well."

Dr Jones has also released his latest book, A Day In Your Life: 24 Hours Inside The Human Body, which currently holds sixth place in the best-seller charts for non-fiction.

He said: "The book is about what happens inside you from the moment you wake until the moment you go back to sleep and have dreams.

"It's from the point of view of a family, so it's a bit different and has had a good response so far."

KENT REMEMBERED

STARTING BLOCK: The Invicta monument at Swanscombe relates how Men of Kent and Kentish Men united with 'boughs on their shoulders' to see off the unwanted attentions of William the Conqueror

Man of Kent or Kentish Man? It's not so easy...

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

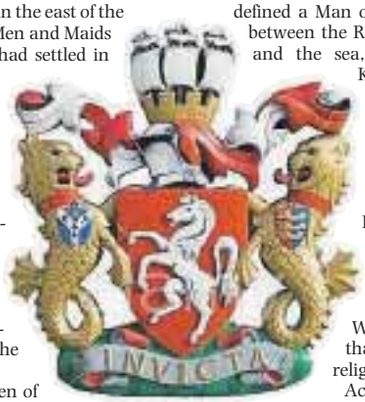
IT'S one of the recurring questions related to our county's great history and those who live here: are you a Man of Kent or a Kentish Man?

The precise definition remains open to debate even now – and this has been one long disagreement, considering that the terms were believed to have been founded more than 1,500 years ago.

According to tradition, the first Men and Maids of Kent hailed from a Germanic tribe called the Jutes who settled in the east of the county, while the Kentish Men and Maids were of Saxon origin and had settled in the west of the county.

The standard way to tell which category you fell into has been according to which side of the River Medway you were born.

If you originated from the south and east of the river, you were a Man of Kent. Those who believe that they are of that lineage tell tales to set themselves apart from their counterparts on the other side of the Medway.



In 1067, it is told, the Men of Kent showed their fighting spirit by warding off William the Conqueror and winning a peace settlement from the new king allowing them certain traditional rights.

Meanwhile, the Kentish Men were said to have simply surrendered.

The story still holds sway today, although a monument in the churchyard of Saint Peter and Saint Paul's Church in Swanscombe tells a slightly different version, suggesting that it was men from both sides of the Medway who fought off William, who also carried the title of Duke of Normandy.

It is claimed that the county motto Invicta originated from this tale.

The plaque reads: "Near this spot in 1067, by tradition the Men of Kent and the Kentish Men, carrying boughs on their shoulders and swords in their hands, met the invader William Duke of Normandy.

"They offered peace if he would grant their ancient rights and liberties, otherwise war and that most deadly.

"Their request was granted, and from that day the motto of Kent has been 'Invicta', meaning unconquered."

Other less popular theories behind the Kentish divide include that of the 19th-century author Charles Henry Fielding, who is said to have defined a Man of Kent as someone born between the River Stour in Canterbury and the sea, with all others being Kentish Men.

Other explanations include the suggestion that a Kentish Man was born in Kent but not of Kentish parents, but a Man of Kent was born in Kent to Kentish parents.

Another definition was put forward in the 1907 book Highways And Byways In Kent, by Walter Jerrold, explaining that the terms have a more religious meaning.

According to Jerrold, the Men of Kent are supposedly those born within the limits of the Diocese of Canterbury, while Kentish Men are those born within the limits of the Diocese of Rochester.

The more you look into the background of the two county sides, the more interpretations there seem to be, which muddies the waters yet more.

With the true definition of where the two Kentish factions originated perhaps still not entirely clear, the search for the truth continues, proving the county's ancient foundations are still a popular topic.

So, whether you believe you are a Man or Maid of Kent, or a Kentish Man or Maid, the debate will no doubt rage over pints of Kentish ale – or should that be ale of Kent?

OPINION

Fracking opens up concerns

The Government's go-ahead for shale-gas exploration in Kent could devastate our landscape, says South East Green MEP Keith Taylor

THE fight against fracking in Kent is about to begin in earnest.

The Government has announced tax breaks for corporations and compensation for communities as fracking companies look to start shale-gas exploitation beneath the beautiful countryside.

Two sites in Kent are the focus for fracking companies: one to the north of Woodnesborough, near Sandwich, the other at Cowden, near Tunbridge Wells.

Shale gas is trapped so tightly in the rock that it has to be smashed out by high-pressure blasts of chemically-infused water; this is the process known as 'fracking'.

This might be the stuff of George Osborne's dreams, but exploiting it could be a nightmare for people living in Kent.

A study by Bloomberg found that to get the equivalent of 10 years' worth of North Sea gas – based on average US well yields – would require between 10,000 and 20,000 wells. They wouldn't be spread evenly across Britain and it is highly likely Kent would see parts of its countryside become industrialised.

Evidence from abroad, which was visible to anyone who came to a screening of my Drill Baby Drill film tour, suggests that fracking can be devastating for communities.

In recent weeks, studies from Pennsylvania have shown drinking water near fracking sites to be highly contaminated and an explosion at a fracking site in West Virginia hospitalised four workers only last week.

Footage of huge trucks driving through Polish villages, as they bring in the millions of gallons of water needed for fracking, will be deeply worrying to the people of Kent, where companies are seeking sites for extracting oil and gas from the shale.

Then there are the gas flares, which burn waste gas in the exploration stage of fracking and emit harmful air pollutants.

With fracking firms like Cuadrilla lining up to take advantage of Government incentives, it isn't just people living next to fracking sites that should be concerned.

Indeed anyone interested in lowering our energy bills might think twice about fracking when Cuadrilla's own management admits shale-gas extraction will have little effect on energy prices for consumers.

On top of this, our hopes of cutting greenhouse-gas emissions and halting climate change are at risk of being dealt a serious blow if we go ahead with burning even more gas.

This new dash for gas comes at a time when many are worried about how we're going to fill the looming energy gap in the UK. The fact is that fracking isn't the perfect solution the Government would have us believe.

"New dash for gas comes at a time when many are worried about looming energy gap"

Instead of drilling thousands of wells across the British countryside, the Government should be doubling its efforts to cut down the amount of energy we actually use and increase production from truly green sources: the sun, wind and sea.

Thankfully, Kent campaigners, inspired by counterparts in places like Poland and Pennsylvania, are gearing up for the fight.

Only this week the residents of Balcombe, West Sussex, have been protesting and blockading the road as Cuadrilla attempts to drill into the countryside near their homes.

The protesters will undoubtedly inspire similar actions in Kent, and fracking firms will certainly be worried that local communities are far less easily sold the fracking story than this government that purports to represent them.

Is it too late to turn the tide on cyber-bullying?

THE internet has brought us many things; it has opened up a world of knowledge and at the same time made aspects of day-to-day life much more efficient.

But the positives it brings can no way hide the truly abhorrent behaviour it seems to invoke in some people.

Cowardly, vicious individuals, hiding behind a screen and making other people's lives a misery... cyber-bullying is becoming more prevalent, and the tragedies that come with it, more frequent.

Everyone should have freedom of speech. However, the internet has seen it spiral out of control. The only way to solve this is education, but have we already allowed it to go too far?

Enjoy summer of fun

THE summer months are upon us and it's time for the best of our county to shine.

Whether it's the Festival of Wildlife or the Historic Dockyard in Chatham, there's something for everyone to enjoy.

Who needs to go abroad when we have all this on our doorstep?

Quango-loving Government

I'M SURE many of us are in full agreement with Brian Westcott and Ross Carter of the Green Party (KoS letters, 04/08) over Government savings.

We've already seen the farce of the so-called bedroom tax, which had not been thought through and saved a minimal amount of money.

Meanwhile, billions of pounds are wasted in the NHS while people go without treatment; the Ministry of Defence throws money away while our troops are sacked days away from qualifying for their full pension; and £30 billion-£40 billion is lost to tax-avoiders as MPs look after their rich friends and future employers... and that's just for starters.

As the two gentlemen intimated, the small people are suffering because governments haven't a clue how to run public services, refuse to get rid of their old mates in quangos and other NGOs and are too reliant on big business for jobs, directorships and party donations (ie bribes).

School's out on voting Ukip

LEGISLATION recently passed by the Government has so angered many as to make us disinclined to vote for either of the Coalition parties ever again.

For those of us already opposed to voting Labour, this is a problem.

Presently, the most viable alternative seems to be Ukip.

However, in the recent Kent County Council elections many of us would not dare vote Ukip as that party had not declared its position on grammar schools – we felt we could not risk voting in the KCC election for a party potentially opposed to schools of this type.

As grammar schools are such a live issue throughout Kent, would Ukip therefore please state its position on this particular issue?

Weekend filth are at it again

SORRY to say it, but it's the weekend and yet again we have rubbish strewn all over the place.

Why do a small number of people, at most six to 12, spoil life for everyone by constantly littering our roads, making late-night noise and indulging in antisocial behaviour?

Dover Road Residents' Association

Well, I liked county show!

I THOROUGHLY enjoyed my visit to this year's Kent County Show, which I thought was a great success.

It showcased so much of what helps make this county special and the huge contribution that agriculture and our rural communities make to its success.

The showground was packed when I went and people seemed to be having a great time, so I was surprised to read the letter (KoS 28/07) expressing disappointment.

I thought the organisers did a first-class job and I for one look forward to next year's.

Edward Argar, by email

Gunman puts us in bad light

AS a life-long shooting man, I abhor the actions of irresponsible air-gunners who reflect on the rest of us more responsible shooters.

Any true field sportsman would never consider using an inadequate weapon against prey or ever shoot out of season, let alone a protected species, which the herring gull is (KoS 28/07). The only gull that can be legally shot year-round under the open licence is the lesser black-backed gull.

The rest are protected, irrespective of how much nuisance they are causing.

The council pest-control department will always help to reduce any problems gulls may be causing.

Only shooters who are members of The British Association for Shooting & Conservation can shoot, take or trap the animal species listed in the open licence as they are trained and have adequate weapons that kill cleanly, without the animal suffering.

Even though the animals listed can be taken during the spring, most responsible shooting men would find it distasteful to shoot, causing the young to be abandoned.

I hope the irresponsible idiots who orphaned the gull chicks are truly ashamed of their actions.

John Atkins, Greatstone

Royal Mail will still deliver

READERS may be interested to understand what the recent announcement on the privatisation of Royal Mail means for our customers, our business and our people.

The Government has acknowledged it is not a good owner of large businesses.

Private ownership will enable Royal Mail to become more flexible in the fiercely competitive markets in which we operate.

We will also have long-term access to capital when we need it. The Government has made clear it doesn't have the money to allocate to Royal Mail ahead of schools and hospitals.

We aim to combine the best of the public and private sectors. The six-day-a-week, one-price-goes-anywhere, affordable universal service will remain unchanged, protected by law. The quality of service regime that applies to Royal Mail under public ownership will continue to apply under private ownership.

Ofcom has already specified minimum standards under regulation. Royal Mail will continue to offer good value for money.

Our people are at the heart of Royal Mail. The current position is that all terms and conditions that apply now to Royal Mail employees would remain in place, on the same basis, were the company to be sold.

To provide further reassurance, we will create a legally-binding, enforceable contract with the CWU.

Many previously Government-owned companies have flourished under private ownership.

'Made in Britain' may no longer be held in the same esteem it once was, but one Kent family have proved your don't need foreign goods to live a happy and contented life

By GREG MILES

FLYING THE FLAG: The Bradshaw family decided to buy only British goods in way of protest against American firms' efforts to avoid paying tax in the UK

One family's Buy British policy has the bulldog spirit

IMAGINE if Britain closed its borders to foreign imports tomorrow... how would you cope? But that is exactly how a family from Westerham have been living since January this year – with surprising results.

The Bradshaws – Emily, James and toddler Lucan – have abided by the simple yet complicating rule of using just British-made products.

In a time of austerity, and with Britain criticised for its faltering manufacturing industry, it is a challenge they could have perhaps done without.

However, the drastic-sounding idea is one the family took up as a protest and to prove a point after the tax-avoidance storm relating to Amazon and Starbucks at the end of last year.

The American giants were paying little in tax despite making multi-million-pound profits from UK business.

"My wife said to me well before Christmas 'I'm not happy about the likes of Amazon and Starbucks not paying taxes in the UK'. She said she wasn't going to buy any Christmas presents from Amazon," said James.

It has given rise to some interesting and surprising results, which the family have been sharing via their website and blog, as well as with the national media.

"We just started discussing what it would take to invest all your money in British products," said James.

"It was a convoluted idea. I created the blog but didn't expect anyone but family and friends to look at it. Due to the interest, we have been on TV a number of times, travelled around the world and been in nearly every UK national newspaper. We couldn't have guessed we would have had all this publicity."

After a difficult few months of scouring labels for the all-important 'Made in Britain' moniker, Emily, 29, a teacher at Hazelwood School in Oxted, and James, who was recently made redundant from his marketing job in the City, soon became experts in what they could and couldn't buy.

It also forced them off the high streets, where they discovered that shop after shop sold foreign imports.

"Every sector has its issues – there are nuances within every one," said 34-year-old James. "There is clothing that might say it is made in Britain or England, but they have actually just had a button stitched on here.

"It takes an enormous amount of research, but it has got easier. The first couple of months were really difficult because you're learning to shop again."

As far as food is concerned, they have been making the most of a local vegetable-box scheme, whereby seasonal vegetables are ordered straight from the source. It is a far cry from going to supermarkets, where fruit and veg is imported from across the globe and is often out of UK season.

'I haven't seen the high street for seven months, and going to the supermarkets is a rare occurence'

"I haven't been to the high street for seven months, and going to supermarkets is a rare occurrence," he said.

"We get things direct. All the food we eat is seasonal – 90 per cent of our food comes from within 30 miles of where we live. Eating like that is saving us a fortune, about 20 per cent on our weekly shop a week. We used to spend about £100 and now spend under £80.

"We did try using some of the bigger vegetable-box companies, but they couldn't guarantee all the stuff was locally sourced. The local company could do whatever we wanted."

Food may be the obvious thing that

What a Carry On... Anita's story

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

TALES TO TELL: Anita Harris has enjoyed a full career since she was spotted aged 15, with roles alongside Phil Silvers, centre, and Tommy Cooper, right

WHEN it comes to reminiscing, Anita Harris has all the trump cards, with tales from Carry On films to backstage chats with Frank Sinatra all tucked away in her locker.

The old-school show-biz star is happy to share those memories while also performing some of her hits during her new tour, which is coming to Deal's Astor theatre on Saturday, August 24.

Anita got her big break when she was spotted dancing on an ice-rink in the capital as a 15-year-old. It was not long before she was touring Europe and performing in Las Vegas.

She went on to enjoy a career that included chart success with Just Loving You, years in the West End in Cats and appearances in two Carry On films.

"I worked with wonderful people like Harry Secombe, Tommy Cooper and Morecambe and Wise," she said. "Harry was such a wonderful and generous artist and person.

"After that, we toured on the Combined Services Entertainment show to all the troops and went to places like Cyprus and Borneo. It was an incredible experience.

"I started in Italy and Brussels and went to Las Vegas. That is where I met Mae West. When I was there, it was in its much quieter days.

"It was the beginning of Sinatra's big days of working there. I went backstage and met him briefly – he was very charming. It was great to see him on stage and hear him perform – he was so jolly and funny. He captured everything show business is about. He entertained and was a part of the family and audience."

After those days abroad, she returned to England and recorded several singles, with Just Loving You peaking at No 6 in the charts in 1967. That same year, she made it into the Carry On series of films, first with Follow That Camel alongside American star Phil Silvers and then Carry On Doctor.

"Joining the Carry On team was indeed a special time in my life," said Anita. "I walked into an arena of incredible comedy actors who had worked for years at their craft.

"I working at the Prince of Wales Theatre in a review with Frankie Howerd. The Carry On producer and director went in to see him and book him for the next film. They saw me work and invited me to the first one – Follow That Camel with Phil Silvers – and that was wonderful.

"The film was set in the Sahara desert, but it was filmed in Camber Sands. I learnt you didn't necessarily go to the Sahara desert to be in the Sahara desert."

The follow-up Carry On Doctor saw her star alongside stars such as Barbara Windsor, with whom she remains good friends today.

"It was an incredibly different role," said Anita. "I had to prove myself to Kenneth Williams. Sid James was an uncle-like character. It was a great learning curve.

"Actors and performers, when we rehearse, we are intense and concentrated to learning the lines – if you embed that into your system, you can have fun. It's the same with any job – if you sustain knowing what you're doing, you can branch out.

"All these artists sit on your shoulders for ever – they make a strong indent into your career."

■ Anita Harris is at the Astor on Saturday, August 24. Tickets are priced at £12 in advance or £14 on the door. To book, phone 01304 370220. Doors open at 7pm; show starts at 8pm.

Battleground re-enactments to take centre stage at Combined Ops show

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

THE Combined Ops extravaganza promises realistic battle re-enactments and the chance for military fans to get up close to vehicles and aircraft when the show roars into Headcorn aerodrome next weekend.

The show is in fifth year at the former Second World War airfield and features flying displays, with a Spitfire, Hurricane and Lancaster bomber all set to make an appearance.

There will also be fly-pasts by the Red Arrows and an RAF Sea King helicopter.

On the ground, visitors will be able to take a close-up look at tanks, jeeps and many other wartime vehicles.

But the show's real spectacle is the number of realistic re-enactments taking place across the weekend of August 17-18.

Soldiers, tanks and aircraft will take part in choreographed battles across the airfield, depicting events from a range of conflicts.

James Baxter, spokesman for Combined Ops, said: "We always encourage our guests to dress up and are looking forward to Combined Ops 2013 being bigger and better than ever before, with an amazing line-up of flying displays planned this year on both days.

"It is fantastic news that we will have the Red Arrows fly-past again this year.

THE REAL DEAL: Choreographed soldiers, tanks and aircraft will combine to re-create famous battles

"Following the tremendous success of last year's event, with more than 6,000 people enjoying the displays, we will be even bigger this year, packed with family entertainment throughout both days.

"Nowhere else can there be so much to see, in the air and on the ground, all in one place."

An interactive experience that will no doubt prove popular this year is the chance to ride around the venue in a tank, courtesy of www.rideatank.com.

Youngsters will also be able to get in on the action in mini-tanks thanks to www.minitanks.biz.

If flying is more your thing, then pleasure flights will be running in a 1930s vintage Drag-on Rapide passenger biplane during the show.

Booking for the flights are available on site.

Tickets for the event are available online and priced at £8 for adults (£9 on the door) and £6 for children and seniors (£7 on the door), while under-fives go free. Family tickets are available from £22 online (£25 on the door) and can be booked at www.heritage-events.co.uk.

FRONT RUNNER: Karting thrills at Buckmore Park

Kart school still out for summer of excitement

THERE is still time for young drivers to make the most of the summer holidays at Buckmore Park before next month's return to school.

The venue's Introductory Kart School offers drivers aged eight to 16 a chance to learn on the same stage Formula One world champions Lewis Hamilton and Jenson Button honed their talents.

The school is perfect for those novices who want to sample the exciting world of karting at full throttle.

The session provides drivers with the basic skills in karting, along with preparing them for further Sisley Kart School lessons or races.

After a track walk to identify the winning racing lines, you can build your confidence and gain better lap times, all within the care of MSA ARKS Instructors.

The track is also holding a family fun day on Monday, August 26, for ages four to 84!

For more information about Buckmore Park events, you can phone 01634 661612 or alternatively visit www.buckmore4kids.co.uk.

Words man Simon enters stage right to help writers

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

FROM estate agent to West End playwright, Simon Mendes da Costa has had a varied career that he will now be sharing with aspiring writers as part of a new initiative at The Marlowe Theatre in Canterbury.

The 55-year-old has been appointed the theatre's first literary associate in a move that will see him co-ordinate playwriting sessions.

It continues a career in the industry that only started at 31 for the Whitstable man and has seen him go on to write shows such as Losing Louis, starring Lynda Bellingham and Alison Steadman, which, after a run in the West End, went global in 2005.

Before writing, he was an estate agent in London. He began his career change by taking evening acting classes and working as a computer programmer during the day.

He said: "I met a woman who ran a writers' group and I decided to go along because I've always liked to be part of something, part of a group. I was there for three weeks when I was asked what I wrote. I said 'Do I have to?' and they said 'It is a writers' group, you know'.

PEN PAL: Simon Mendes da Costa

"Well, I had to write something for the next week and that was the first time I put pen to paper."

He struggled to write a short story and instead wrote a sketch based on the breakdown of a relationship, which ultimately formed the basis of his first play.

That play, Table For One, opened at The Hen & Chickens theatre bar in Highbury, north London, in 2001.

Speaking on his appointment at The Marlowe, he said: "This is an exciting and interesting opportunity for me, the theatre and, hopefully, all those who take part in the workshops and those who submit new writing.

"They are for anyone – people who have never written before, or those who have been doing it for a while. They will gain experience and confidence and what I want at the end of the course is for people to have written their own piece, based on whatever they like.

"Finding your own voice takes time and I know how difficult writing is, but it is something you can do."

The Marlowe will be running three playwriting sessions: Marlowe's Young Writers, aimed at those aged 13-18, and Marlowe's Speakeasy and Marlowe's Playwrights, both for those aged 18 and over.

All sessions start mid-September. Visit www.marlowetheatre.com or phone 01227 787787 for details.

Lady giraffes settle into new home

TWO endangered female giraffes have arrived at Port Lympne Wild Animal Park as part of a breeding programme.

It is hoped the Rothschild's giraffes will be joined by a male in the near future in the project to boost dwindling numbers of the species.

Animal director Adrian Harland said: "We are delighted to be accepted as part of this breeding programme. There are so few Rothschild's giraffes in the wild that programmes like this one are essential. I hope – with the arrival of the male Rothschild's – that we will soon have the patter of tiny hooves."

The female giraffes, Lunar and Lehanna, travelled from Woburn Safari Park to arrive at their new home on The African Experience at Port Lympne. Their arrival means Port Lympne joins an exclusive group of 14 institutions in the UK to hold Rothschild's giraffes.

FOOD&DRINK AWARDS 2013

Sponsored by

MBK Design Studio
Kitchens, Bathrooms, Bedrooms and Home Studies
Est 1987

We are delighted to be able to bring you the very first Kent Life & Kent on Sunday Food & Drink Awards

THE Kent Life & Kent on Sunday Food & Drink Awards will take place at Tudor Park Hotel on Thursday, November 14, 2013, from 6.30pm to midnight.

These brand-new awards are designed to champion, highlight and offer a showcase to the good and the great from the county's food and drink industry, including local producers and suppliers, small farming businesses, chefs, restaurants, pubs and hoteliers – people who care about the countryside and the future of our local environment.

The companies nominated will all be voted for by you, our readers. We want to know if you've received a fantastic meal at your local pub or have been impressed by the produce and service at your farmers' market or farm shop.

Entry forms are available online at www.kentnews.co.uk.

Entries close on Friday, August 30, 2013.

Our panel of judges will then select a shortlist, kickstarting the independent judging process where finalists will be visited or interviewed to determine a worthy winner in each category.

All finalists will be invited to the prestigious awards ceremony in November, where they will enjoy a Champagne reception and three-course meal based on locally-sourced produce before finding out if they are a winner.

This is the first Kent Life & Kent on Sunday Food & Drink Awards and we are immensely proud to be able to offer you the chance to reward and recognise the deserving businesses within our local food and drink industry, the ones that consistently go above and beyond expectations.

These awards are what you make of them so if you are the owner of a restaurant, a budding chef or local producer, then help to spread the word among your clients and visitors.

With our online voting system up and running, it takes no time at all to cast your vote.

The judging panel is looking for quality over quantity, focusing on good comments rather than number of votes, so everybody is in with a chance, no matter how big or small your business is.

AWARDS CRITERIA

NEWCOMER OF THE YEAR

Pomegranate Catering

This popular category is open to anyone in the food or drink business who has started a new venture within the last 18 months. It could be any food and drink business but we want to know what impact they have made on the local community and whether they have started to achieve any success further afield. Are they helping to promote Kent food and drink to a new audience? Tell us who has impressed you.

BUTCHER OF THE YEAR

Porsche Centre Tonbridge

This category is here for one reason and that is to praise our many local butchers and everything they do for Kent. Consider asking your butcher how their meat is hung, prepared and cut and whether it can be traced to a local farm. Are the staff knowledgeable and helpful? Does the butcher play a key role within the local community? If so, nominate them.

BEST TEA SHOP OF THE YEAR

Audley

We recognise that tea shops are an integral part of the Kent food and drink scene and we'd like to know your favourites. Who makes the best tea, serves the nicest cakes and the freshest scones? Is the jam home made and are the sandwiches freshly cut and liberally filled? Most importantly, are most of the ingredients locally sourced? We're looking forward to hearing about your favourites.

INDEPENDENT RETAILER OF THE YEAR

This category acknowledges the hard work Kent's independent food and drink retailers put into giving their customers the best possible experience in-store, reinforcing their role at the heart of the community and showing true innovation with their displays. We are looking for independent retailers who put local and seasonal at the heart of the food and drink experience and who are proud to work with and support the best the Garden of England can offer.

BEST FARM SHOP

Waggon at Hale

Just like our Farmers' Markets, a good farm shop needs to have that extra-special something to tempt shoppers away from their local supermarket. Are the staff friendly and knowledgeable, is the range of produce and the layout of an excellent standard, does your local farm shop offer a box scheme? Is most of the produce sold there grown or raised on that farm, or nearby and if not would the owner be able to tell you where it is from?

BEST FOOD OR DRINK PRODUCER

This category celebrates our local suppliers and producers who play such a vital role in the food community. We are looking for someone who consistently provides a reliable quality of products and services to their customers. So whether it's your local bakery, drinks merchant or meat producer, we want to know why this person or business goes the extra mile for you and gets your vote.

BEST FAMILY DINING VENUE

Eastwell Manor Ashford

We've all experienced that sinking feeling when you go out for a meal with the family and you know almost immediately the proprietors and staff would have preferred you to have left the kids at home. We want to know about the exact opposite, those establishments that welcome and treat with respect your whole party, from elderly to very young, and ideally don't banish you too an outer room away from the main dining area. Do they have high-quality menus that suit every age group, provide high chairs if needed, offer useful distractions such as paper and crayons for younger children to use at the table? Is there a children's play area and good baby-changing facilities in the toilets? And most importantly is the food of an excellent standard and worthy of mum and dad as well as the younger members of the party? Tell us all about your best family dining experience in Kent.

BEST PUB OF THE YEAR

faversham.org connect

Combining country pubs and dining pubs, the whole eating-out experience needs to be taken into account in this category. Customer service, value for money and the quality of the food should all be accounted for. How well does the establishment you recommend use and name local suppliers and seasonal produce throughout its menus? Neighbourhood pubs are at the heart of the local community and this category is your chance to give something back for all the enjoyment they give you. Are the staff friendly and welcoming, even if it isn't your local? Are there local ales, juices, wines and ciders available to purchase and if so, are they proudly on display? Also, note the quality and speed of the service, the overall atmosphere and ambience, both inside and outside in the beer garden.

BEST FARMER'S MARKET

MYFERRYLINK Owned and run by the crew

The key to a good Farmers' Market is not only the range of produce and the quality of its stalls but also the principles that it supports – for example, does it work as a co-operative with other farmers, is most of the produce sold there grown or raised locally? Are the stallholders welcoming and knowledgeable and is the layout easy to navigate as you move around the market? Are any extras offered on a regular basis, such as cookery demonstrations or talks, is it well advertised so you can plan your visit in advance, is there good accessibility and parking?

RESTAURANT OF THE YEAR

Romney Marsh Fish Market

We suspect that this category will be one of our most coveted awards, as the Kent Life and Kent on Sunday Restaurant of the Year needs to offer an incomparable dining experience, from the ambience to the service and most importantly the food. Is it locally sourced and does it change with the seasons? Does chef support local producers and are they recognised on the menu? Look through the wine list, are there local as well as international wines and sparkling wines and can the staff tell you more if you ask? We'd expect nothing less from our Restaurant of the Year.

CHEF OF THE YEAR

Swans Kitchens & Bathrooms Ltd

Kent is blessed with outstanding chefs working in the county's fantastic array of restaurants. The Chef of the Year should be someone who has devoted him or herself to the cause of serving the best possible food. They will demonstrate technical ability, use of seasonal ingredients, presentation of the food and an understanding of how flavours work together. They will be able to lead and inspire their team and to talk to customers knowledgeably about the dishes they have enjoyed. Above all, we are looking for passion – that magic ingredient that defines true greatness in the kitchen.

BEST KENT FOOD AND DRINK HERO

Kent has a food and drink scene that is more vibrant than many others across the UK. This category celebrates the individual who has made the most impact on the food or drink community – someone who goes the extra mile to promote Kent to a wider audience and is passionate about local produce throughout. Now is your chance to nominate your own Kent food and drink hero.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

IT'S difficult to shake off the feeling of déjà vu when sat at the table of a newly-launched restaurant that boasts the same name and similar décor as its predecessor – a forerunner that has in the past left me cold.

But not to be disheartened, or unfair on the new management, I try to view the re-launched Bar Vasa in Sandgate with fresh eyes. After all, I've been told it's very good.

What strikes me when I walk in is that there already seems to be a bit more life in the place. Not wanting to keep referring back to its previous days, but it often felt empty and soulless.

Sitting there on a Wednesday evening, however, with the sun peering from behind the clouds, the tables outside begin to fill up quickly.

My guest and I decide to eat alfresco. The only downfall to this, unfortunately, is that the outside part, at the front of the bar-restaurant, is right next to a busy main road, just off the beach. It means conversation is often interspersed with the sound of cars zooming past.

This, of course, is not the management's fault and after a little while you get used to it.

A friendly waitress takes our drinks order and we look at the menu, which boasts a mixture of seafood and meat.

I opt for the crayfish and avocado salad with a hot-and-sour dressing and my guest the tempura-battered tiger prawns with sweet chilli sauce.

The salad is packed full of juicy, tender crayfish – no scrimping on the chef's part. Light and fresh, it is the perfect starter for a summer's evening.

My dining companion's prawns are, again, tender and flavoursome. I am starting to be won over, thinking Vasa seems destined for success.

For the main course, I have moules marinière: steamed mussels in white wine, shallots, cream and parsley, served with chunky chips.

My guest plumped for the pan-seared scallops: king scallops in a white-wine cream sauce with bacon served with samphire and new potatoes. I wish I'd had the same. The scallops were perfectly cooked and the sauce rich and creamy. While the dish looked small, it was deceptively filling.

The mussels were disappointing. Small and slightly chewy, some of them also tasted gritty. There was no sign of the plump, tender mussels for which I was hoping. On the plus side, the sauce they came in was delicious and the chips the perfect accompaniment.

For dessert we shared a vanilla and white rum panna cotta, which was tasty but could have done with more rum.

My food was a mixed bag, but then all of my guest's dishes were very good. The waiting staff were incredibly attentive and the setting lovely.

As a bar-restaurant, it's never going to have the same kind of atmosphere as a restaurant, but for a laid-back meal, sitting in the sunshine with the beach no more than 20 feet away, Bar Vasa is ticking all the right boxes.

Our bill came to £64.45.

Angela's swim school is a safe bet for us all

IT IS frightening to learn that more than a third of children cannot swim by the age of eight.

Drowning is the third-highest cause of accidental death among children under the age of 16. If you need convincing about the importance of learning to swim, my mother was dubbed Super Gran after saving a teenager from drowning in Puerto Rico. At 60 she managed to rescue the 13-year-old boy from rough seas as two lifeguards looked on unable to help.

Two questions I am often asked are what age should a child learn to swim and how long does it take to learn?

Swimming should be as natural as walking and talking. Starting them from four months learning proper technique is what is important.

Swimming is also a skill that needs time to develop.

Over the 22 years I have been teaching, I have found that it takes three to four years to learn to swim properly. That is being able to swim 400m front-crawl, back-stroke and breast-stroke.

My advice this summer is to join swimming classes – it is never too early or late to start.

As Prince William would encourage, let's change the statistics and save more lives.

Visit our website www.angelasswimschool.co.uk for more information on Angelas' Swimming School.

Times are changing at Wingham Wildlife Park

HAVING taken over Wingham Wildlife Park in February 2008, owners Tony and Jackie Binskin and their team have worked hard to see the park turn around, becoming one of the UK's fastest-growing wildlife parks.

Tony Binskin said: "When we first took over the park, it didn't have a great reputation and was still seen as just a bird park. Our toughest job has been changing people's minds and getting the people of Kent to give us another go."

Jackie added: "We now have over 7,000 season-ticket-holders, from the 41 we had in 2008, which shows that a lot of our visitors want to come back and see the new animals on their next visit, which will inhabit the enclosure they saw being built on their previous visit!"

Just in time for the summer holidays, the collection at Wingham Wildlife Park is not going to disappoint, with a cast of new arrivals having joined the park over the first half of the year.

"We work very hard all of the time to bring new and exciting animals, which people want, as well as steering the park in a more conservation-heavy direction," said Tony.

Along with adding individuals to the park, completing pairs of animals, including Loki the male jaguar (who was recently named in a poll on the park's very successful Facebook page), there are also new species. In January the park received its own pack of European wolves and a few months later it added Jasper the red panda, pictured above, to that end of the site.

Jackie said: "Jasper is a really important conservation animal for us and we hope to find a female for him when he matures, but for now he is a huge hit with staff and visitors alike."

The latest addition to the park is Nando the lowland tapir, a very gentle animal who has taken up residence on the large lake at the park.

"The mandrills that inhabit the island at the other end of the park seem almost as interested in him as our visitors are!" exclaimed Tony.

He added: "Even though we have already had an action-packed start to the year, there are still a few more surprises we have planned for the very near future."

HE NOSE YOU KNOW: Nando the tapir is a gentle animal who has interested beasts and visitors alike!

Walk among the animals at Howletts and Port Lympne

TWO fantastic wild animal parks provide the perfect environment in which to experience exciting and educational days out this summer.

Howletts, near Canterbury, is set in an area of glorious natural beauty. There are wooded walkways and paths to explore, along with educational and fun animal talks throughout the day, with something to discover around every corner.

Howletts creates the adventure and you keep the memory. Watch the education team treat the animals to a different enrichment every day at the park.

From honey-pots to hessian bundles, wind-chimes and different feeders, the dedicated team will provide animal treats every day as part of the August theme: a treat a day keeps the vet away!

Join in with the themed ranger trails, events and talks taking place every day throughout the summer break. Younger adventurers can pick up a free ranger's log book – an activity book designed to encourage them to be rangers for the day and learn interesting facts about the animals along the trails.

Walk among lemurs, come face to face with lions, tigers, giant anteaters and western lowland gorillas in their glass-fronted enclosures; spot the latest and cutest new arrivals; and even mimic the primates by trying the exciting tree-top challenge – an obstacle course with rope-bridges and zip-wires.

For the younger adventurers, the animal adventure challenge with climbing walls and wobbly walkways is bound to thrill.

Designed to be a centre of excellence for conservation, Howletts has large enclosures filled with natural foliage to provide camouflage, shelter and privacy for the animals. It's the perfect place to witness conservation in action.

Book your family tickets online and save 20 per cent. Visit www.aspinallfoundation.org/howletts for more details.

Meanwhile, down at Port Lympne, near Hythe, you can join the team for primate pandemonium, during which you will learn all about primates and make your own monkey mask or tail – this activity is available every day in August.

Join the education team for fun and lively primate talks every day throughout the holidays – times of events will be posted on the information boards around the park.

Port Lympne is set in more than 600 acres, with far-reaching views to the coast and beyond – it is the only wild animal park in Kent offering a unique safari experience.

Board a safari truck and be transported to The African Experience, where giraffe, black rhino, ostrich, zebra and more can be seen roaming free, as if on the plains of Africa.

Younger adventurers can also pick up a free ranger's log book here, similar to that at Howletts.

Discover four on-foot zones to meet big cats and small cats in carnivore territory, marvel at the monkeys, lemurs and western lowland gorillas on the primate trail, grab a snack or board a safari truck at basecamp and even say hi to the meerkats in the discovery zone.

Port Lympne, famous for its wide open spaces and stunning scenery, is a breeding sanctuary for some of the world's most endangered animals. This park also prides itself on its large natural enclosures filled with foliage – it's the perfect place to witness conservation in action.

See www.aspinallfoundation.org/portlympne for more information including opening times, entry prices and special events – you can also book your family tickets online and save 20 per cent!

Firm backs tougher insolvency sanctions

BUSINESS advisers from Maidstone have backed Government proposals to impose tougher insolvency sanctions.

DSH Chartered Accountants and Business Advisors has said that new regulations show the importance of ensuring companies are properly controlled. New plans outlined by business secretary Vince Cable will shake up the insolvency process, giving extra powers to the courts and Government bodies including the Insolvency Service and Financial Conduct Authority.

These include allowing courts to impose fines on directors when handing out disqualification orders and ensuring directors banned outside the UK are also banned from running a UK company.

Duncan Cochrane-Dyet, partner at DSH, said: "These proposals will specifically target directors who flout the law and then enter into insolvency.

"For those directors running companies that become insolvent through no negligence of their own, it will make no difference.

"We believe the threat of sanctions and fines highlights the need for increased attention to detail by directors of struggling companies of all sizes and sectors."

All change for new boss at Stagecoach

BUS company Stagecoach has appointed a new managing director to take charge of operations in east Kent and East Sussex.

Philip Norwell will be in the driving seat of a business that employs more than 1,250 staff at eight depots across the region and operates a fleet of 450 buses and coaches and carries 46 million passengers a year.

He said: "I aim to encourage further simplification of the highly-successful bus networks in east Kent and East Sussex, expand smart-ticketing and work with partners including local authorities and businesses to ensure the bus plays a key role in the future."

Mr Norwell has worked in the industry for 39 years, starting out as a general clerk in Peterborough in 1974.

He was a driver for 18 years before joining the Cambridge head office as marketing officer and progressing to commercial director in 2002.

Rays of hope as companies savour the summer upturn

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

THE recent hot and sunny weather has been welcome news for many of us, not least those in the county with businesses as they have watched their sales soar.

Jo James, chief executive of the Invicta Chamber of Commerce, has said that a tourism push in the past two months has helped the county's economy grow towards a more positive future.

The chamber has 1,200 members from all business sectors across the county and the group has been comparing statistics between quarter three in 2012 and quarter two this year.

Mrs James said that the Kent economy was beginning to show signs of life, with members reporting increases year-on-year and a steady curve of progression.

She said: "In the current economic climate you have to look at figures month by month and you have to be positive when the things are going in the right direction.

"We have had more members who have had increased sales during this quarter than at around the same time last year, which is good.

"The feedback we have is that across the board things are a little more positive."

The chamber has reported that its members' UK sales have increased this year and there has been a big improvement for businesses exporting their products.

SUNNY DISPOSITION: Chief executive Jo James

Mrs James said: "There is a far better picture – there are more members who have had increased sales over the period.

"This is really interesting because when you also look at export sales over the last quarter there is a 25 per cent increase in the amount of Kent companies selling their products and services abroad.

"Members have also forecast their profits during the next 12 months – about 34 per cent expect to see their profits improve. So there is a more general positive feeling out there."

There has also been upbeat feedback from the chamber's members regarding employment, with 40 per cent of the businesses registered saying they have increased staff numbers in the past three months.

The last two weeks has seen thousands of visitors flock to the county as part of the various music and creative festivals going on around Kent. And with tourists spending money, Mrs James has also had reports of a far better cash flow for businesses.

"When you are looking at the hospitality and leisure sectors, weather is a huge indicator there – you are going to get increases. There is a direct correlation.

"As for cash flow, compared with this time last year we have the same amount of people who say cash flow is 'improving', but the number of members who say their cash flow is now 'constant' is better. Putting that into a figure, 50 per cent less members say that their cash flow is 'worse'. So that is a big plus."

Business-owners from all corners of the county will have their fingers crossed August continues in the same vein as July, with non-stop sunshine loosening our wallets once again.

Sandwich's Discovery Park attracts another three tenants

THE Discovery Park in Sandwich has taken on three more tenants at the 220-acre site.

Europe's largest science and technology park has brought 36 new businesses into the facility in the past nine months.

Broadstairs recruitment consultancy Morgan Jones, which has been in business for 14 years, has now expanded to the park.

The company recruits staff for businesses in the pharmaceutical, engineering, finance, law and accounting industries.

Managing director Jonathan Clarke said: "The Discovery Park will provide an extension to our operation and utilise the services that are currently available to existing clients. Discovery Park represents a very exciting prospect for business in east Kent and we are very pleased to be part of it."

BIG ATTRACTION: Discovery Park

Also moving is manufacturing company Composite Resin Developments, which will be moving its entire factory space from Margate to the Sandwich site as a result of business expansion.

Managing director Mike Jackson said: "Relocating to a facility which offers 8,000 sq ft of quality manufacturing space has enabled us to expand the company and our product range, with a focus on exporting goods.

"We currently employ five people but hope to expand this to 10 within the next 12 months."

Third of the new companies to take up residence is Wilkins Kennedy, which provides accounting and business advisory services across the UK – its third site in Kent, alongside offices in Ashford and Orpington.

Derek Read, associate manager at Wilkins Kennedy, believes that east Kent is a business centre ready to grow significantly.

He said: "Following the investment in Margate's Turner Contemporary Centre, alongside central and regional government regeneration initiatives, a significant level of research has been undertaken and there are several initiatives bringing investment in to the area, such as the Portas Pilot Pop-Up Scheme, the Grow For It campaign and the East Kent Expansion Fund loans.

"These initiatives, coupled with the development of the Discovery Park and Manston airport, make the region an exciting place to be doing business and we were attracted to the site because of its potential and the potential of the surrounding areas."

Company beginning to benefit from its in-house training programme

TRAINED UP: Sean Falkowski

DOVER-based MOT and service agency Husk Ltd has annouced its first apprenticeship candidate to complete the company's training programme.

After a three-year MAN truck and bus apprenticeship, Canterbury mechanic Sean Falkowski has been awarded an NVQ Level 3 in heavy mechanical and electronic-systems maintenance and repair.

The 21-year-old is now a fully-qualified HGV technician.

Falkowski was selected from a list of applicants and took a structured theoretical and practical programme both at the Husk Lydden workshop and the MAN training HQ in Swindon.

Husk director Tom James said: "This was an excellent opportunity for Sean to learn a skilled trade and take the first steps to developing a career in the industry.

"This is an investment in a young local man that will pay dividends to Husk."

An animated response to EU culture project

STUDENTS from the University for the Creative Arts at Rochester created a unique live event by synchronising computer-generated imagery to classical music.

Animation students produced a visual accompaniment to an orchestral performance of Milhaud's La Création du Monde.

The show, part of a project funded by the European Union's Interreg IVA Channel Programme, aims to engage the creative and cultural industries in the UK and France.

College offers cheaper option than uni courses

NORTH West Kent College is offering a range of higher-education undergraduate programmes as a cheaper university option.

From £4,995, students can gain a foundation degree affiliated to the University of Greenwich, or a Higher National Certificate/Diploma by Edexcel.

After two years on a foundation degree or Higher National Diploma, students can top up their qualification to degree level at university with an extra year of study.

BE PREPARED: Poor grades needn't necessarily stop a student going down their chosen career path

Students in clearing... do your research now

EVERY year thousands of students from Kent are faced with the prospect of not getting into the university they had orginally applied for after a change of situation or poor exam results.

Some will decide university is not for them, but many will look to go through the sorting process known as 'clearing' in which school-leavers can change their focus and find a university course to suit them.

The University of Greenwich at Medway has set up a 'clearing hotline' to help prospective higher-education students find the right courses.

Bev Woodhams, head of recruitment at the university, has worked in higher education for 20 years. She said: "Clearing will be the last chance to get a place at university this September.

"Some courses may not be in clearing and popular subjects fill up fast, but as long as you are prepared and ready in the starting blocks you will be metres ahead in the 'clearing race'.

"The hotline team has trained student ambassadors, academics and specialist professional staff who encourage callers to think about the choices they are about to make and advise them how to go forward."

Mrs Woodhams has put together her top tips for students to help with the process:

1. Keep calm and stay focused: So your results could have been a little better, or you've just realised your dream career means doing a stint at university. All is not lost – you now know what needs to be done. Arm yourself with a pen and paper and get down to research. Find out what can you study with the grades you have and what you'd want to study? What do you need to study to progress to the career you really want?
2. Check your original choices first: If you've just missed your required grades or UCAS points, it's worth contacting your 'firm choice' university as it may still make you an offer to study.
3. Be positive: If neither Higher Education Institution (HEI) will confirm your place, you are now a 'clearing applicant'. You can call any HEI in the UK directly and ask if it will accept you on a particular course with the qualifications and grades you have.
4. Be prepared: On August 14, make a list of questions. On August 15, phone the university and ask if you can speak to an academic about the course. Ensure you have your UCAS ID, the results of your recent exams and your GCSEs to hand as well as anything else you intend to use as leverage. If you are undecided, give several universities a ring to see what they can offer, but do remember time is of the essence and some HEIs may issue an acceptance deadline.
5. Check it out: Most HEIs will host an open or visit day on August 17-18. If you are serious about studying somewhere, you need to know what it's like. You wouldn't buy a house without reading about it first, would you?

New course pointing to secure future

YOUNGSTERS dreaming of a career in the security industry are being urged to take advantage of a MidKent College course hailed by the exam board Edexcel.

The Higher National Diploma (HND) in public services teaches students both "current and relevant" issues and has received "very positive feedback", according to a report into its first year.

Edexcel also commented on the wide range of visits and activities that have been organised, "ensuring learners have a full understanding of the sector, its work and the challenges facing it".

The HND in public services was launched in September 2012 and is one of 20 higher-education courses offered by MidKent College.

It focuses on the security industry, which includes counter-terrorism and conflict management but also covers other public services such as the police, fire service and armed forces.

Students enrolled on the first course learnt about issues affecting organisations in recent times, including the 2011 London riots and the Stafford Hospital scandal.

Teaching and learning manager Katriona Topps said: "We're delighted to have received such a positive report."

Shepherd Neame eyes growth in deal with Swiss distributor

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

FAVERSHAM brewery Shepherd Neame has taken on a new distributing company, a move that could save it some £2 million a year.

The Swiss company Kuehne and Nagel Drinkflow Logistics Limited (KNDL) has signed 10-year agreement and will take over Shepherd Neame's freight operations.

The brewery is hoping that the partnership will help it find new business in northern England and in mainland Europe.

The joint operation will also see 57 Shepherd Neame staff members become KDNL employees with "a very limited number of redundancies", according to chief executive Jonathan Neame.

He said: "Our team does an excellent job, but, good as they are, our logistics operation is sub-scale and restricts our ability to grow outside our heartland.

"This agreement enables us to exploit the national growth opportunities arising in our portfolio for brands such as Spitfire, Whitstable Bay, Asahi and Samuel Adams and also seek out international opportunities as we expand our exports following the completion of a recent distribution agreement into North America.

"This is a significant change for the business which was decided upon after very careful consideration of our options and the impact on jobs and our customers."

The deal will see KNDL take over responsibility for local and national drinks distribution, including to Shepherd Neame's 350 pubs and hotels.

Shepherd Neame will also retain ownership of its Faversham warehouse distribution centre at Bysing Wood and manage customer services.

However, the brewery has announced that it will be reorganising its brewing and brands division and retail and tenanted division, with some job losses expected. The handover process is due to be completed by October.

KNDL is a leading global freight operator and operates in more than 100 countries with a reported 60,000 employees.

KNDL managing director David Coulson said: "This new agreement between Shepherd Neame and KN Drinks Logistics fully supports both businesses' growth strategies and follows extensive discussions.

"An important aspect of the proposal has been the continued operation of the existing facility in Faversham, which will now be fully integrated into the KNDL national distribution network."

The brewery has also reported an increase in beer sales for 2013 ahead of the partnership with the Swiss operations group.

BREWER: Chief executive Jonathan Neame, left

Mr Neame said: "Looking at our trading for the full year, I am very pleased we have delivered a solid performance in difficult market conditions, with like-for-like retail sales up 3.3 per cent. We have a healthy trading position, a strong brand portfolio and this new agreement with KNDL gives us new opportunities."

Earlier this year, Shepherd Neame strengthened its relationship with Kent County Cricket Club with a 10-year sponsorship deal.

This saw the brewery sponsor the club's headquarters in Canterbury, which has been renamed The Spitfire Ground, St Lawrence – a reference to the popular Sheps beer.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Quex Park attraction takes tourism award

QUEX Park at Birchington has won the Chairman's Award from Visit Kent in "recognition of support of tourism in Kent".

The Thanet attraction includes the Powell-Cotton Museum, Quex Park Estates Company, Quex Foods and Mama Feelgoods and a range of boutique businesses.

Director Anthony Curwen said: "By working together to create a tourist destination, with the pure mind-set of partnership working, not just within Quex Park but with other attractions, something very special has been created.

"And all this to support and perpetuate the internationally-important museum with its quite literally unique collection and the unique heritage of Quex Park."

Could you be the UK's worker of the year ?

EMPLOYEES from around the county are being urged to sign up and compete For the UK Worker of the Year 2013 competition.

Kent has been well represented in previous years, with fire-protection engineer John Stone from Westerham winning the title in 2010. The competition is designed to recognise excellence in the British workforce.

'Serious concern' over privatised Royal Mail

ROGER HOUSE, Federation of Small Businesses chairman for Kent and Medway, warns that Royal Mail privatisation could impact on trade.

He said: "The FSB understands reform is needed to make it more competitive. However, we have serious concerns about the impact this could have. Recent sharp increases in postage costs, both of letters and parcels, have already had a negative impact on small businesses."

National crèche looks to the east

A LEADING UK care company will use east Kent as its model as it launches its new mobile crèche service.

Nationally-known service group SureCare will use its east Kent franchise to target hotels, wedding venues and conference and corporate events centres whose attendees may be looking for childcare.

The company has operated franchises and branches across the UK since 1994, with a focus on domiciliary care and taking services into people's homes.

But following the arrival of new managing director Gary Farrer, the company is expanding into childcare and a range of other care-related services.

SURECARE: East Kent's Raj Jayaram and Zola Mangcotywa

Raj Jayaram and Zola Mangcotywa, who run the SureCare franchise in east Kent, are the first group to launch the mobile crèche service.

Mr Jayaram said: "SureCare's decision to expand into childcare was one of the key reasons we were keen to set up our own franchise in east Kent.

"There is growing demand for mobile crèches in Kent, London and elsewhere in the UK, but there is a need for anyone offering this service to have the right experience."

SureCare is known for providing community care services for all age groups, usually targeting more elderly customers, but the new venture will allow it to target both business people and full-time parents who need their children looked after.

"We are able to provide the perfect childcare solution for anyone planning a wedding, conference or corporate event," said Mr Jayaram.

NISSAN has taken a long hard look at its Micra supermini and shaken it up to take on increasingly tough opposition.

Out goes the Noddy and Toytown front end that put off so many would-be buyers, while the interior has also had a major overhaul to make it more competitive.

In the past, the Micra has been a big hitter for the Japanese brand in the UK, especially as the distinctively-styled generations two and three were built at Sunderland, but low profitability in small cars means the current five-door-only car is produced in India to keep prices competitive.

Sadly, though, it has not been at the races on styling and cabin design and quality; this generation arrived in 2010 but has so far failed to have the market impact of its two predecessors.

Admittedly, the downsizing trend has made the small-car sector one of the most unforgiving, with tough opposition at the value end, notably from the Skoda Fabia and Suzuki Swift and the Korean duo, the Hyundai i20 and Kia Rio.

The Micra has had a potential ace up its sleeve for a while, however, in the form of the 98PS (97bhp) supercharged DIG-S version of the 1.2-litre petrol engine that runs across the range. This delivers decent performance when required and, providing your right foot doesn't abuse that, also keeps fuel consumption sensible.

Combine this with the new, more purposeful, front and back, plus much slicker cabin, and Nissan can now take the fight to the opposition.

Other points already in its favour were excellent manoeuvrability for city use – it has the best turning circle in its class – and good visibility out of a classy and spacious cabin.

This now features a new centre console, upgraded materials and higher equipment levels, while the new £500 NissanConnect navigation and communication system comes with a 5.8-inch touchscreen display.

Prices are also attractive, starting from below the psychologically-important £10,000 mark for the entry-level Visia trim and yet still bringing equipment that cash-strapped young buyers want such as aux/USB connectivity and Bluetooth, six airbags and electric windows in the front as well as electronic stability control (ESP) – air-con is a £500 option, though.

Nevertheless, it's clear that most buyers will want mid-range Acenta spec (from £11,550), delivering more style and generous creature comforts including alloy wheels, climate control, 60/40-split folding rear seats, electric door mirrors, cruise control, auto lights, front fog lamps, height-adjustable driver's seat and leather-trimmed steering wheel with audio controls.

A five-speed manual gearbox is standard, whether you choose the non-aspirated 80PS (79bhp) version of the 1.2-litre engine or the supercharged DIG-S, but there is the £500 option of a CVT (continuously-variable transmission) auto box.

Micra given scope to attack

DOING THE ROUNDS: Nissan has decided its supermini the Micra was in desperate need of a new look and has remodelled the exterior and given the interior a much-needed spruce-up to make the car far more competitive in what it a very tough sector

DON'T LIKE

... the lack of engine choice, but the supercharged DIG-S is an impressive jack of all trades, so maybe Nissan is right to keep it simple.

NOT SURE

... the Micra can still mix it with its toughest rivals, but this hefty revision of the car must boost sales and its share of a hard-fought sector.

REALLY LIKE

... the grown-up looks; married with the perky performance of that DIG-S engine, they make the Micra a fun player rather than a figure of fun.

IN MUCH the same way that the VW Golf defines the modern-day Volkswagen brand, so the Octavia has come to epitomise Skoda.

But the third-generation car, launched this year, also seems to show where Skoda next wants to go; no longer content to be a value brand, it aims to be more mainstream or even mainstream/premium like VW itself.

If this seems an unlikely strategy, just look at how VW itself continually pressures upmarket sister brand Audi by bringing out ever more premium models.

Unlike some cosy 'badge engineering' entities of the past such as BMC and the US arm of General Motors, VAG (VW-Audi Group) clearly sees inter-brand rivalry as a force of good.

And that force has created an Octavia far classier than its predecessor.

Priced from £15,990 for the hatchback or from £16,790 for the estate as tested here, the newcomer has a crisper front end and side-profile, is 90mm longer and 45mm wider and has a 108mm-longer wheelbase to make the cabin larger, yet up to 102 kilos has been shed – the weight of one adult passenger.

It also changes position and target market within an expanded seven-strong Skoda range.

With the absurdly affordable and capacious all-new Skoda Rapid launched last year now tackling the Ford Focus and company, the slightly improved Octavia will tackle larger prey and the big volumes of the company-car sector.

Not that its bedrock support in the private market will mind much that its hero has become roomier and gained more tech and equipment while still offering Skoda value across familiar trim levels: S, SE, Elegance and the newly-announced vRS performance model.

Skoda has laboured hard over these labels to deliver added value, so the mid-range SE trim of the estate tested here, for instance, brings £2,220 of extra gear for just £1,200 more than the S and this includes a DAB (digital) radio in the sound system, smart alloys, driving-mode selection – Normal, Eco, Sport and Individual – dual-zone climate control and a smart infotainment touchscreen.

Even better, the car also gets some eco goodies thrown in, including stop-start. Its turbocharged 1.4TSI petrol engine also impressed me: the VW group's parsimonious diesels have contributed to the Octavia's rise, but the group has raised the stakes on petrol technology, too.

So the 140PS (138bhp) unit tested here has lively acceleration (0-62mph in 8.5 seconds) yet also has an official combined mpg of 53.3; to get similar performance from a diesel model, you need to buy the 2.0TDI SE (£20,940), which will also deliver an extra 10mpg, according to the official stats, but you'll need to cover a lot of extra miles for that economy to claw back the £1,750 paid for the car upfront, and that excludes the extra wear and tear on mechanicals and tyres from the heavier engine. And then there's the sheer enjoyment of the petrol-engine Octavia; the lighter engine makes better use of the sporty yet comfortable Golf-based chassis.

You will have to go diesel, though, if you want the all-wheel-drive Octavia versions (from £21,490).

Inside, the longer wheelbase and greater width are evident in the roomier cabin, while the total cargo area in seats-down mode exceeds that of the larger Ford Mondeo Estate and VW Passat.

Fixtures and fittings have Skoda's usual solidity and no-nonsense ergonomics, but I had a couple of comments during my week with the car that it felt gloomy and lacked flair. A fair point, but some manufacturers have tripped over the fine line between gloomy and tacky.

A TOUCH OF CLASS: Skoda looks to be aiming at the higher-end market with the third-generation Octavia being given slightly more room and an added trim level, the vRS, to take on those who traditionally dominate the company-car sector

Punto boasts sporty outlook

FIAT has upgraded its Punto supermini, but the Italian three-/five-door hatch still looks great value from £9,950.

Generous standard equipment, five low-emission engines and a simplified range are the highlights, including a new Sporting version (from £12,355) featuring body kit, gloss-black roof, sports suspension, 'Tarmac-finish' dashboard, chrome exhaust and 16-inch two-tone spoke alloys.

Honda 'most reliable' again

HONDA has been named most reliable car manufacturer in the annual What Car? and Warranty Direct Reliability Survey – the eighth year in a row.

The result is based on claims data, reviews and the opinions of more than 50,000 owners of Honda models like the Civic, pictured.

What Car? editor-in-chief Chas Hallett called it a "remarkable achievement".

Taking a peek at future Mini

AS the current Mini hatchback nears the end of its production life, we've been allowed a peek at what the third-generation car might look like.

The Mini Vision concept features the same proportions as Sir Alec Issigonis's 1960s original and the latter-day models of the BMW era, but the two-tone finish has echoes of the rival Daimler/Mercedes-Benz group's Smart brand.

Rising sprint star Asher-Smith out to prove age is no barrier in Russia

Dina Asher-Smith, the youngest member of Great Britain's team at the World Championships in Moscow this week, talks to Greg Miles about the wait for exam results and her big opportunity

IT was not that long ago Dina Asher-Smith was sitting her exams and thinking about the summer ahead.

Now the 17-year-old has jetted off to Moscow as part of a women's 4x100m relay team showing plenty of promise ahead of the World Athletics Championships.

It was an unexpected call-up for the Orpington athlete but a justified one. She ran the opening leg of Britain's fastest 4x100m relay in 12 years two weeks ago at the Anniversary Games at the London Olympic stadium. It was also the fourth-fastest time in the nation's history in that event.

The trip completes a whirlwind summer for the Blackheath and Bromley racer, who will also be finding out her AS-level results while in Moscow on Wednesday.

She is, though, just hoping to make the most of the experience ahead of her race, which comes on the final day, next Sunday.

"We've got lots of time to soak up the atmosphere. I think it's a good thing having to wait, because I can learn from the trip. It gives me time to sit down and watch everything," she said.

Her inclusion in the squad came as a bit of a surprise, with Asher-Smith previously only focusing on the European Junior Championships in Italy last month, when she won gold in the 200m and the 4x100m relay.

That performance and the one in London at the end of last month ensured she had a place on the plane.

Speaking from the squad's camp in Barcelona, from where they left for Moscow on Wednesday, she said: "I'm still shocked I've been selected. When I got the call, I was like 'No way'. I just asked him to repeat it to me in case I was dreaming. It was a bit embarrassing.

"I was just focusing on the European Juniors. I'm one of those people that when I set a target I don't look at anything else – it's tunnel vision."

While in Moscow she will be able to cheer on Blackheath and Bromley team-mate, Dartford sprinter Adam Gemili, with the 19-year-old running in the 200m and the 4x100m relay.

His 200m heats are on Friday, with the semi-finals that afternoon and the final on Saturday. The relay takes place on the final day. He has been looking after Asher-Smith on their stay.

"We're pretty good friends," she said. "He's like my big brother here – we get on really well. He's been making sure I don't get lost.

"I will be rooming with [team-mate] Annabelle Lewis in Moscow. She's got more experience but is almost as new as I am. It means we have a chance to talk about all the things we've seen."

The team have had time to gel on and off the track in Barcelona, giving Asher-Smith no reason to believe they cannot replicate their time from London last month.

"The Anniversary Games went really well," she said. "It was the fastest time in 12 years. We are really happy with it.

"I think we can replicate it. Me and team-mate Anyika [Onuora] didn't have too many practices together, but the other girls are fine. We've had time in Spain to iron things out. I don't see why we can't go as fast."

That run came in front of a sell-out 90,000 crowd at the Olympic stadium, but it was not a new experience for Asher-Smith. She was given plenty of inspiration last summer as a box-carrier on two finals days, one of which was Super Saturday when Team GB famously bagged three gold medals at the Olympic stadium.

"That's definitely the biggest crowd I've seen," she said. "It helped me realise the pros and cons. There's that much more adrenaline. Then again, when you're going into the baton changes, you have to shout that much louder."

The last 18 months has confirmed that athletics is a career worth pursuing for Asher-Smith. An injury picked up playing hockey two years ago also played a part, but she is also making sure she keeps up with her studies, with Wednesday the day she finds out her AS-level results in biology, chemistry, English and history.

"Even after the World Juniors last year I wasn't sure – I thought I was doing it as a hobby. I wasn't taking it seriously. When I ran 23.14 seconds in the 200m in Loughborough in May, I thought I better take it seriously," she said.

"Getting my results on Wednesday could be tragic. I might put it off in case it's bad. My family are staying at home because coming to Moscow was a surprise for us all. They are picking up my results for me. I was planning on having it sent to me, but my school want to know what my options are the next day."

Best finish of season for Ashford's Camier

LEON Camier continued his impressive form at Silverstone with a third and fifth at the track in the Superbike World Championship.

The 27-year-old from Ashford claimed third in race one, which was the FIXI Crescent Suzuki rider's best finish of the season, and fifth in race two after it was red-flagged when a rider crashed out.

The results push Camier into ninth in the series, which heads to the Nürburgring next on Sunday, September 1.

Defenceman Miller returns to Dynamos

INVICTA Dynamos defenceman Tyrone Miller has returned to the club for his first full season.

The 30-year-old joined the Mos midway through last season from Streatham Redskins and has done enough to earn another deal.

"Tyrone has years of experience behind him but at 30 still has years of hockey left in him. He has played at a higher level for over a decade and proven himself to be one of the best in our division, having moved into the NIHL South back in 2010/11," said Mos coach Kevin Parrish.

INJURED: Matt Fish could miss a large part of the season after rupturing his anterior cruciate ligament against Colchester United

Fish set for long lay-off but Allen remains upbeat

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

MATT Fish's knee injury will be kept in perspective by manager Martin Allen, who has admitted his shock at the seriousness of the defender's potential lay-off.

The full-back went down under no challenge after just three minutes of the opening game of the season against Colchester United last Saturday.

A scan on Monday revealed that he had snapped his anterior cruciate ligament and while it is not thought to require surgery it could see the former Dover Athletic man out for a considerable amount of time.

It is a big blow to the Gills, with Fish proving his doubters wrong to play a big part in the promotion campaign last season, making 44 appearances as the Gills clinched the League Two title. The injury also stretches Allen's already threadbare squad.

It echoes what happened to Gills striker Adam Birchall just weeks after he signed from Dover in 2011, when in a pre-season friendly he ruptured his cruciate ligament and was ruled out for the entire season.

"He [Fish] is going to be out for quite a long time and that is a blow to everyone. It is quite upsetting," said boss Allen. "The consultant will give us further information about how long it will be.

"I would be guessing and speculating it could be six to 12 months. Hopefully, he will be back before the end of the season.

"It was a shock. It upset me. When they pull the shirt on and represent our club, they also represent me. I feel responsible for him."

Telling Fish the results of the scan proved a difficult moment for Allen, even more so given the impression the defender had made on him last year, having previously failed to impress fans in an inconsistent debut season under Andy Hessenthaler.

"When you've got to tell them the news, you just have to deliver bad news," he said. "And it's not nice, especially to someone that's such a hard worker and conscientious young man and such a nice bloke who 15 months ago looked like he was probably heading out the back door. He's turned his career around.

"He's taken on the mantle to improve mentally and physically. If he was your son you would be absolutely proud of him.

"Hopefully, he will be back playing for us before the end of this season because all of that back five deserve to be playing in Division One. I am hopeful and confident."

Allen is remaining philosophical about Fish's recovery.

"After a little while I put it into context – it's a knee injury," he said. "It's not life-threatening. We are human beings – it's bad news, but it's not life-threatening.

"We will do all we can to get him through it. We try to put it into perspective. It is a blow and a difficult one, but there are other things like illnesses that can be more devastating. We will look after him and keep it all on a level, but of course it is a serious injury."

Academy right-back Stephen Butcher made his professional debut after Fish went off, but Michael Harriman, pictured left, will provide the stop-gap in the short term.

The 20-year-old signed on a one-month loan from QPR on Tuesday and went straight into the side to face Bristol City that night.

He made 20 appearances on loan at Wycombe Wanderers last season, playing in the Chairboys' 1-0 win at Priestfield in front of the Sky cameras in February.

He returned to London before the end of the season and made his debut for QPR against Liverpool.

FUTURE: Bradley Dack made his debut last year

Dack looking to build on debut season at Gills

FIRST-TEAM football is a priority for young Gills star Bradley Dack, who is hoping to kick on and cement his place in the Gillingham squad.

The 18-year-old broke into Martin Allen's first-team thoughts at the start of last year after impressing in pre-season friendlies.

He was rewarded with eight starts and a further eight appearances from the bench, while also grabbing two goals from midfield as Gillingham clinched the League Two title.

He is hoping to build on that this campaign with the club making the step up to League One.

"I would like to play more games than last year and score more goals," he said. "That's about it, really.

"I just need to get my head down, keep playing well and hopefully get a run of games and score some goals. I will just play my game and see what happens."

The Gills were goalless in their first two games of the season in defeats at home to Colchester United in the League One opener last Saturday and in the first round of the Capital One Cup to Bristol City on Tuesday night. However, Dack is not worried by that and feels they have enough ability to find the net.

"It's a fine line. We are creating chances – it will come," he said. "There are goals in the team everywhere, from Cody [McDonald], Keds [Danny Kedwell], Bayo [Akinfenwa], [Antonio] German. In midfield, Whelps [Chris Whelpdale] scores goals, and myself.

"It's a long season of 46 games. I'm sure we will start winning soon."

■ After travelling to Wolves this weekend, the Gills are back at Priestfield next Saturday when they host promotion-hopefuls Brentford.

Edwards to captain England in Ashes

ENGLAND women's Ashes squad will be top-heavy with Kent talent when it starts this weekend.

Kent and England captain Charlotte Edwards will lead the side. She is joined by county team-mates Laura Marsh, Tammy Beaumont, Lydia Greenway and Natasha Farrant. Left-arm seamer Farrant, 17, has been included solely in the T20 squad, while the other four are also in the Test and ODI teams.

The women's series consists of just the one Test, which starts on Sunday this weekend at Wormsley Cricket Ground in Staffordshire. It is followed by three ODIs, the first at Lord's on August 20, followed by two at Sussex's Hove ground on August 23 and 25.

The series is finished off with three T20 matches on August 27 at Chelmsford in Essex, August 29 at the Ageas Bowl in Hampshire and on August 31 at Durham's Riverside Ground.

The three T20 matches will be broadcast live on Sky Sports, with the second and third matches taking place directly before England men play Australia.

Snetterton a turning point for Jackson

A MID-SEASON break is just what the doctor ordered for Airwaves Racing as they picked up a double podium and six top-eight finishes as the British Touring Car Championship resumed at Snetterton.

Aron Smith secured a sixth and two third places, while Mat Jackson finished eighth, fourth and second to make it the Wrotham-based team's most successful weekend of the season at the Norfolk track.

The victories last Sunday also marked the first anniversary of the team using their NGTC Ford Focus STs.

It was, though, a torrid weekend for Addison Lee Motorbase driver Liam Griffin, who did not finish in any of the three races because of mechanical problems and a crash in the second race.

SECOND: Jackson on podium

Jackson said: "It's a massive turnaround for our season from where we've started and to come here and be able to challenge for wins is mega.

"I feel sure that we can deliver the results we need to be back in the mix.

"We knew that we were more than capable of delivering wins and it's been massively frustrating, but the second half is certainly going to be interesting to watch because both Aron and myself are back in the mix."
